Hail, and Well Met

Welcome to Ryndor

The winds shift, the rift calls, and the stars stir in their slumber. To walk Ryndor is to walk between worlds—tread lightly, or be swept into the current of forces older than time."

— Ophelia, Praetor Oracle and Leader of the Sev'rinn Rebellion

Welcome, Traveler, to the Weird Lands of Ryndor

Across Ryndor's realms, the scars of old wars linger in stone, steel, and memory, but now, The Weirding spreads through the land, bending reality itself. Nobles and warlords hide ambitions behind silk curtains, while ancient cults stir beneath city foundations, drawn to the shifting astral tides. The land responds to the ambitions of its people—floods, magical storms, and temporal anomalies emerge when the delicate balance is disturbed. Merchants whisper of roads that loop back upon themselves, and scholars dream of cosmic awakenings that are impossible to explain.

In Ryndor, magic, technology, and faith weave together, their fragile interplay destabilized by the flow of Primordial Resonance. This volatile magic, drawn from the tension between the material and astral planes, is now affected by the Weirding, making every spell both a resource and a risk. Sev'rinn practitioners carefully harness this magic, knowing that each use risks fracturing reality further, inviting strange, unintended effects. Entire villages have become trapped in time fractures, while animals and plants mutate unpredictably under the influence of the astral surge.

Technology, once the Ullac Regime's tool to suppress magic, has also been warped by the Weirding. Automaton sentinels malfunction, and old artifacts taken from Nebernoria behave unpredictably. The Rift, initially opened by the reckless ambition of the Regime, is now a gaping wound leaking unstable magic that neither science nor faith can fully control. Praetor Ophelia and Riven Trug, leaders of the Sev'rinn rebellion, rallied against these forces to protect what remains of Ryndor's magic, but the Weirding's spread has complicated their hard-won victory.

Faith, too, is altered by the Weirding. Gods still lend power, but their blessings twist in strange ways, shaped not only by the hearts of their worshippers but by the strange energies that surround them. Magic, science, and faith reflect the intent of those who wield them, but under the influence of the Weirding, even the best intentions can ripple outward unpredictably, bringing unexpected consequences.

Ryndor teeters on the edge of uncontrolled transformation. The Sev'rinn's mastery of elemental essences, the twisted remnants of Ullac technology, and the entities stirring within Nebernoria—all struggle for dominance. Yet, fate in Ryndor is not written in stone; it is woven from the choices of those brave enough to act. In a world where possibility reigns, every step forward shifts the balance—toward salvation or ruin—as The Weirding reshapes the path ahead.

Primordial Resonance

Primordial Resonance is born from the friction between realms, where the fabric of Ryndor brushes against the chaotic expanse of the astral plane. This metaphysical tension creates pockets of raw, unformed energy—an echo of creation itself. At these seams where reality bends, Resonance leaks into the mortal world in unpredictable bursts, as if the two planes cannot help but collide. It is neither stable nor infinite, emerging only where existence trembles—whether from great conflict, moments of heightened emotion, or disruptions in natural law.

The interaction between these planes generates a delicate balance: too much resonance in one place destabilizes the environment, spawning astral storms or temporal anomalies, while too little leaves regions drained of magic entirely. Practitioners who draw on this energy, like the Sev'rinn, tap into the resonance at their own risk, knowing that with every spell they cast, they not only shape reality but also erode the boundary between worlds. As this energy ebbs and flows, so too does the power of those connected to it—leaving Ryndor forever caught between order and chaos, creation and collapse.

Rift to Nebernoria

The rift to Nebernoria is a mystical and mysterious gateway that connects Ryndor to a small part of the astral plane called Nebernoria. The rift is located in the center of Eveltoft, yet it remains a source of wonder and fear for many. The rift is guarded by powerful enchantments and mystical creatures, ensuring that only the most skilled and experienced travelers can pass through it safely. The rift itself is a shimmering, pulsating portal that seems to vibrate with otherworldly energy.

The Rift to Nebernoria was born from the violent friction between the planes, where the boundaries of Ryndor and the astral realm ground against each other until they ripped open a hole in reality itself. This breach occurred in the heart of Eveltoft, unleashing torrents of Primordial Resonance and astral anomalies into the world. The Rift is not just a gateway—it is a wound, ever-expanding and unpredictable, spilling forth both untapped power and unimaginable horrors. Those who venture too close are changed, drawn into its currents or consumed by its chaos.

The Rift's formation altered the balance of magic in Ryndor, creating surges of energy that empowered some while draining others. Attempts by the Ullac Regime to control the Rift through technology and nullification fields failed, for the energy it releases lies beyond mortal comprehension. Now, the Rift looms as both a promise and a threat—offering ancient knowledge and boundless power to those bold enough to claim it, but at the cost of inviting the astral's relentless chaos into the fabric of the mortal world.

Despite the risks, the rift is a source of great significance for the people of Ryndor. It is a gateway to a world of incredible wonder and magic, where the laws of physics and reality as we know them do not apply. It is a place where dreams and nightmares come to life, and where the impossible becomes possible.

The interaction between these planes generates a delicate balance: too much resonance in one place destabilizes the environment, spawning astral storms or temporal anomalies, while too little leaves regions drained of magic entirely. Practitioners who draw on this energy, like the Sev'rinn, tap into the resonance at their own risk, knowing that with every spell they cast, they not only shape reality but also erode the boundary between worlds. As this energy ebbs and flows, so too does the power of those connected to it—leaving Ryndor forever caught between order and chaos, creation and collapse.

The Weirding

The Weirding is a chaotic force born from the friction between the material and astral planes, first unleashed with the appearance of the Rift to Nebernoria. It permeates all aspects of Ryndor, warping reality in both subtle and catastrophic ways. The familiar is transformed into the strange—environments shift, objects behave unpredictably, and creatures mutate into unnatural forms. Time becomes unstable, sometimes freezing or looping inexplicably, and spells can malfunction with dangerous consequences.

No part of society is spared from the Weirding's influence. Magic, technology, and even faith are destabilized, forcing factions to adapt or fall victim to its strange effects. Weird Zones, pockets of extreme distortion, appear unpredictably, altering the landscape and posing new dangers to adventurers and citizens alike. Some see opportunity in the chaos, delving into these anomalies for arcane power or forbidden knowledge, while others work to contain or control it.

As the Weirding spreads, it reshapes Ryndor from a once familiar world into something alien, uncanny, and unstable, forcing those within to rethink survival, progress, and power.

How to Use this Book

The World of Ryndor offers a rich set of tools to enhance any game, whether you're running a homebrew campaign or supplementing an existing setting. Inside, you'll find:

- Characters, NPCs, and Settings: Easily integrate or adapt unique personalities and locations into your world.
- Factions, Powers, and Governments: Introduce shifting alliances and political intrigue.
- Reliquary of Items and Artifacts: Add magical artifacts, advanced technology, and enchanted gear to invigorate gameplay.
- Bestiary of Magical Creatures: Populate your world with drakes, astral entities, and more.
- Encounters, Adventures, and Campaign Arcs: Ready-to-use quests and events to fit seamlessly into any campaign.
- New Player Options: Includes an entirely new class—the Sev'rinn—with elemental customization, new features for existing classes, five new races, and one racial variant.
- Random Tables: A collection of tables for inspiration and quick session planning.

Whether you use the material wholesale or pick and choose what fits your needs, this book serves as a flexible toolkit to bring the complex, magical world of Ryndor to life.

The All-Ryndor Catalogue

Welcome to the comprehensive guide to Ryndor, a land steeped in history, shaped by its geography, and defined by its unique calendar system. From the bustling port city of Surreymouth to the floating island of Holmea, Ryndor is a place of adventure and wonder. But to truly appreciate the land and its people, one must understand its rich history and geography. The land of Ryndor was shaped by powerful magical forces, which created vast forests, towering mountains, and sprawling plains. Its many cities and townships are as diverse as the land itself, with their own unique cultures, histories, and traditions.

History

History

The Sev'rinns of Ryndor are powerful magic wielders. Some Sev'rinns exhibit strengths in certain Earth elements like water or wind, and some Sev'rinns seem to be able to commune with the dead, or see the future. Sev'rinns usually begin to exhibit their powers at a very young age. Their hair is usually the first indicator of which kind of power runs through their veins, as it will begin to grow in vibrant colors when they are about three or four years old. A young Sev'rinn will usually show an affinity for items or places that match their powers, like Ziran Sev'rinns will become overjoyed when surrounded by nature or animals, Sorash Sev'rinns will enjoy flying and being at great heights.

The Royal Sev'rinn Bloodline

The Sev'rinns were the rulers of Ryndor for three centuries, since Aldrin Shun became the first Sev'rinn after the Battle of Ardentor.

After years of torment and torture at the claws of the giant Fire Wyrm Ardentor, the armies of Ryndor marched upon his mountain lair and called him out to face them in battle. Thousands of men and women were lost in the Battle of Ardentor, and so it seemed that the nations of Ryndor would also be lost to Ardentor's fires.

Standing alone in an ashen field among the thousands of dead, Aldrin Shun stood and raised his arms aloft as the fearsome Ardentor released a final, massive fireball from his jaws. Instead of being consumed by the flames, Aldrin's skin glowed fiercely, and his hair stood upon its end, as the flames were absorbed into his body.

He swirled the flames around himself, and outstretched an arm to command Ardentor to submit to his will. Ardentor writhed and recoiled from Aldrin's command, and was engulfed in white fire. Ardentor screamed and swiped his massive claws at Aldrin. They fought this way for days, until the dawn of the tenth day when Ardentor finally bowed his head before Aldrin. And Aldrin collapsed in exhaustion upon the giant Fire Wyrm's snout. Ardentor carried him back to his dwelling in the city of Eveltoft, where Aldrin would be declared the Emberclad Sev'rinn.

He became a beloved ruler of Ryndor, and birthed a bloodline of magical progeny that would unite and rule over Ryndor for a prosperous and peaceful age. Aldrin took a wife named Kaida, who was a gifted healer. Some believe her to have possessed some magic of her own, although the truth of her gifts has been lost to time. Kaida and Aldrin had three children: the youngest were twin girls Miyu and Eira, and the eldest a boy named Destin. Miyu and Eira were both gentle and kind, but possessed no magical gift in their blood.

Destin, however, proved to be a powerful wielder of nature magics. He became the first Greenheart Sev'rinn, and contributed much to the taming of wild beasts to use in Eveltoft as work beasts and magical familiars. Destin had two children with his wife Kari: Gyda the elder, and Einar the younger. Kari sadly passed during the birth of their third child, named Sylvi, who did not survive much longer than an hour. So saddened was he by the death of his wife and third child, Destin retreated to the woods with his closest companion, a giant male albino elk called Inge. Ten days passed before he returned, and he was never the same, but far more powerful than before. He started the Hilderturgy, a tradition by which the Elder Sev'rinn would teach and pass down their magical knowledge to their progeny. He taught Gyda and Einar rigorously, and both exhibited magically touched blood. Gyda would soon become the stronger. She possessed power over both water and wind, and became the Tideborn Skycaller Sev'rinn when she was no more than 18.

The following decades were fruitful for the descendants of Aldrin Shun, and many beloved Sev'rinn would bring prosperity and knowledge to all of Ryndor:

- Gyda's daughter Celestia, the Lithomage Sev'rinn, who built most of the sanctuary city of Eveltoft.
- Celestia's son Aethelric, the Eidolon Sev'rinn, who ruled for only five years before his untimely death.
- Aethelric's son Kenjiro, the Voidstrider Sev'rinn, who ruled for more than 80 years.
- Kenjiro 's daughter Runa, the Emberclad Eidolon Sev'rinn, said to be the most powerful since Aldrin himself.

Descent into Darkness

Runa, powerful as she was, birthed no magical children of her own. None of her seven progeny could pass the Hilderturgy, and she became desperate to pass her magic on to the next heir of Ryndor. She used her ability to commune with the dead to create the dark magic of necromancy, sacrificing the soul of her newest born child in an attempt to create the magical soul of a Sev'rinn. It was thought that this child died in the womb, and none but her eldest Knute knew the truth.

Runa birthed a grey skinned child that she named Torgar. He passed the Hilderturgy before the age of ten, and was a full blooded Sev'rinn by the time he was 15. Torgar was vicious, cruel, and greedy. He lacked the gentleness that was the hallmark of the previous Sev'rinns. He reveled in war and violence, and bred the strongest military Eveltoft had ever seen. He introduced crippling taxes on the surrounding cities in Ryndor, and marched his armies upon them when they couldn't pay.

The Torgarian War

A civil war was brewing against Torgar, led by his own brother Knute. Runa attempted to quell the rage in her son Torgar to save Ryndor and Knute. She told him he was birthed from the spirit of her own sacrificed child. Torgar was enraged and heartbroken, and took the life of his mother Runa, while Knute was watching, unknown to both of them. In that moment, Knute called the guerilla army to march against the army of Torgar, and their war tore the city of Eveltoft to shreds. It is said that the war raged for ten years, as the Atmani Sev'rinn Torgar resurrected his armies over and over.

Knute won only by brute force and determination. He marched nearly the entire population of Ryndor to their death to defeat Torgar, and the entire island was devastated for decades following the war. Eveltoft had been razed to the ground, and much of the history of the Sev'rinns was lost. Little is known about what became of the other six children of Runa. It is generally assumed that they were killed by Torgar before the Torgarian war.

The Ullac Regime

After the victory of Knute, he called his regime Ullac, named for law and order. The bylaws of Ryndors were drawn, and the oppressive nature of Knute’s regime began to reveal itself

The ruling class became more interested in accumulating wealth and power than in serving the people of Ryndors. Taxes were raised to exorbitant levels, and minor offenses were punished harshly, with many innocent people being imprisoned or even executed.

In addition, magical creatures and people were hunted down and killed ruthlessly, leading to a rebellion known as the Sev'rinn Rebellion. The Sev'rinns, who were descendants of the first Sev'rinn, Aldrin Shun, began to revive the old ways, and many people began to turn to them for guidance and protection.

The Sev'rinn Rebellion

Led by the powerful magical Sev'rinn, Praetor Oracle Ophelia, the Sev'rinn Rebellion fought against the Ullac Regime for years. The Sev'rinns, were on the brink of defeat when the rift to Nebernoria suddenly appeared in the heart of Ryndor.

At first, no one knew what to make of the strange portal, but it quickly became apparent that it was the key to the Sev'rinns' salvation. The rift opened up a pathway to Nebernoria, where the Sev'rinns discovered powerful magical artifacts and advanced technology that they used to turn the tide of the war.

The Sev'rinns' forces became augmented with new weapons and armor made from the strange materials found in Nebernoria, and their fighters were trained in powerful spells and magical abilities that gave them a decisive edge in combat. The Ullac Regime was caught off guard by the Sev'rinns' sudden shift in power, and they were unable to withstand the rebels' new arsenal.

In the end, the rift to Nebernoria was a key factor in the Sev'rinns' ultimate victory over the Ullac Regime. The rebels were able to use the resources they found in Nebernoria to improve their lives and the lives of their people, and the rift itself became a symbol of hope and freedom in Ryndor.

The Ullac Regime became increasingly desperate as the rebellion continued to gain momentum. They began to rely more heavily on brutality, which only served to further alienate them from the people of Ryndor. Eventually, their forces were weakened to the point where they could no longer resist the rebels.

In the end, the Sev'rinn Rebellion was victorious, and the Ullac Regime was overthrown. Praetor Oracle Ophelia emerged as a beloved leader and a symbol of hope for the people of Ryndors. She helped to establish a new system of governance that was fair and just for all, and she worked to rebuild the damaged relationships between the various nations that had been torn apart by the conflict.

The Nebernorian Accord

The Rift to Nebernoria brought more than knowledge and danger—it ushered in the beginnings of The Weirding, fundamentally altering the terms of the Nebernorian Accord. As reality itself frayed under the influence of the Rift, the Sev'rinn Council and scholars struggled to maintain control. Strange mutations and anomalies began to emerge among artifacts and explorers alike, complicating efforts to catalog and regulate items retrieved from Nebernoria.

The Keepers of the Rift, once focused solely on controlling passage between realms, were forced to confront escalating Weird Zones forming near the portal. These areas twisted space and time unpredictably, creating challenges for the Keepers and opportunities for rogue factions. The airships of Skyhaven—once reliable vessels for trade and exploration—reported that routes through Weird Zones had begun to change mid-flight, leaving expeditions stranded or lost.

Attempts to negotiate with Nebernorian entities became more erratic as the Weirding intensified, warping communications and intentions. Benevolent spirits became cryptic or volatile, and previously cooperative beings now offered deals laced with strange conditions and lingering curses. The Crystal Scholars scrambled to contain the growing instability, realizing that the very fabric of the Accord could not withstand the shifting nature of the Rift's influence.

Over time, rumors of corruption within the Keepers of the Rift gained traction, as some members grew obsessed with the strange power of the Weirding. Factions seeking to exploit the Rift took advantage of these distractions, smuggling cursed artifacts across Ryndor, spreading further instability. Tensions between the major cities—especially Ban Mynydd and Eveltoft—intensified, with each vying to secure the resources and knowledge the Rift offered, no matter the cost.

Today, the future of the Accord is precarious. With the Weirding now a permanent part of Ryndor, the Rift stands as both a gateway to limitless possibility and a harbinger of chaos. Every expedition, every artifact, and every deal carries risks that can no longer be fully understood. Adventurers must ask themselves not only if the rewards of Nebernoria are worth the danger, but also if the world can survive the consequences of what they bring back.

A Weird Utopia

The Crystal Scholars emerged from the devastation of the War of the Sev'rinns, determined to rebuild society with fairness, justice, and opportunity for all. Under the leadership of the visionary Ophelia, they established a government centered on knowledge, inclusivity, and exploration. Yet their dream of utopia faces an unforeseen challenge—the growing influence of The Weirding.

The Weirding has transformed the Scholars' ambitions, particularly their work around the Rift to Nebernoria. While the rift offers access to unparalleled magical insights and powerful resources, it also leaks chaotic astral energies that twist reality. Artifacts brought back from Nebernoria sometimes carry hidden dangers, causing unexpected mutations or time distortions, forcing the Scholars to adopt stricter protocols. Despite their best efforts, the Weirding has made every expedition a gamble, with potential rewards as great as the risks.

The presence of the Weird Zones complicates everyday life. Agriculture and trade have been disrupted by spatial anomalies, forcing society to adapt quickly. Education and healthcare—pillars of Ryndor's new order—must now contend with astral plagues and weird afflictions, yet the Scholars remain dedicated to ensuring access to these resources for all. Magical misfires and technological glitches occur more frequently, but the Sev'rinns work tirelessly to maintain the delicate balance between elements.

Though diversity and equality remain core ideals of the Scholars, the Weirding strains even the most robust structures of this utopia. Factions and rogue groups take advantage of the chaos, smuggling dangerous artifacts or exploiting the instability for personal gain. Despite these growing tensions, the people of Ryndor remain committed to their shared vision of progress and unity.

This new era demands adaptability. The Crystal Scholars' pursuit of knowledge and the Sev'rinns' mastery of magic have never been more important. The citizens of Ryndor know that while The Weirding may change the rules, the dream of a better future still endures—if they are willing to pay the price.

Factions & Powers

Factions and Powers

Ryndor is shaped by shifting alliances and powerful factions, each vying for control over magic, technology, and political influence. This section explores the major players—governments, rogue groups, and ideological movements—that shape the world's fate. From the Crystal Scholars and their pursuit of knowledge, to the Keepers of the Rift, dedicated to safeguarding astral breaches, and the remnants of the Ullac Regime, factions offer both opportunities and challenges. Each faction presents narrative depth and moral ambiguity, allowing players to ally, infiltrate, or oppose forces throughout their adventures.

The Ullac Regime

The Ullac Regime was built on centralized authoritarian control, with Knute

Shun-Rote at its apex as the first Supreme Chancellor. Power was consolidated in a rigid hierarchy, where each region of Ryndor was governed by appointed bureaucrats and military commanders, all directly accountable to the central government in Eveltoft. The regime maintained its dominance through a council of technocrats who oversaw the development of powerful technologies, and an internal security force tasked with rooting out magical practitioners and dissenters. This tightly controlled structure ensured compliance through surveillance, taxation, and the suppression of magic.

Though the Ullac Regime has fallen, its influence lingers in the form of black market trade. The most sought-after commodities are nullification engines and anti-magic technology, highly coveted by factions that wish to suppress magic or control its use. Former regime operatives, mercenaries, and rogue inventors smuggle these artifacts into cities like Eveltoft and Wyrmbost, where they fetch exorbitant prices. The underground trade of these devices threatens the delicate balance of Ryndor, offering dangerous power to those bold enough to claim it.

The Crystal Scholars

The Crystal Scholars, the modern technocratic government of Ryndor, emerged from the ashes of the War of the Sev'rinns, determined to create a society rooted in justice, equality, and knowledge. Led by the visionary Ophelia, they have since become a beacon of hope. However, their mission has grown more complex with the emergence of The Weirding, a force that warps magic, time, and space. This phenomenon has challenged their ideals, forcing them to adapt their methods in unprecedented ways.

The Rift to Nebernoria serves as both an opportunity and a threat, channeling the strange energies of The Weirding into Ryndor. Scholars stationed around the Rift navigate these chaotic forces, balancing exploration with containment. Despite strict safeguards, anomalies have crept into Eveltoft, threatening the city's stability. The Weirding has impacted council decisions, as new dangers force the Scholars to confront uncertainty in ways that test their resolve and leadership.

The 12 Seats of the Crystal Scholars

The twelve members of the council play pivotal roles in guiding Ryndor through both progress and unpredictability. Each seat represents a value essential to society, but The Weirding has added new complexities to their work. Elections to the council remain rigorous, requiring unanimous agreement among the remaining members, but now evaluations also account for candidates' resilience against Weirding influence.

Seat of Justice – Celia Gray: The unpredictable effects of The Weirding complicate law enforcement, and Celia now navigates strange cases where time and intent blur, forcing her to redefine justice in uncertain circumstances

Seat of Wisdom – Agatha Raine: Agatha oversees magical education but now must restructure the curriculum to address anomalies and magical surges. Her role includes guiding scholars to safely research both magic and Weirding phenomena.

Seat of Compassion – Amara Moonflower: The Weirding introduces new afflictions and magical illnesses, requiring Amara to devise unique treatments while maintaining equal healthcare access. Some ailments are so strange they alter not just the body but the soul.

Seat of Innovation – Zephyr Ironsmith: Zephyr harnesses Weirding energy for new technologies but must tread carefully, as experiments frequently result in unpredictable consequences. His inventions help contain anomalies, but each breakthrough comes with unknown risks.

Seat of Faith – Sister Althea: With The Weirding distorting even divine magic, Sister Althea guides the faithful through crises of belief. She works tirelessly to ensure that spirituality remains a grounding force in an increasingly surreal world.

Seat of Harmony – Lysandra Dawnstar: Diplomacy becomes more difficult as cities demand control of Weird Zones for their resources. Lysandra works to broker peace between factions while maintaining the unity of the council amidst rising tensions.

Seat of Nature – Jasper Windwhisper: The Weirding has caused mutations in flora and fauna, threatening ecosystems. Jasper leads efforts to stabilize these changes while learning to coexist with the new, strange lifeforms emerging from the anomalies.

Seat of Industry – Bartholomew Solis: Bartholomew must balance economic growth with the dangers of Weirding artifacts that disrupt trade. He brokers deals to ensure trade routes remain open, even as airships and caravans are lost to spatial shifts.

Seat of Courage – Galen Stormbreaker: Galen's warriors now face astral creatures and temporal threats, training for conflicts far beyond conventional warfare. His leadership inspires others to confront the unknown with bravery and determination.

The Crystal Scholars strive to maintain stability as The Weirding redefines the fabric of their society. Each of the twelve seats plays a vital role in adapting to these new realities, blending tradition with flexibility to guide Ryndor through a strange and volatile era. Their commitment to knowledge, progress, and unity remains unwavering, even as they stand on the precipice of the unknown.

Keepers of the Rift

The Keepers of the Rift remain a secretive, elite order of scholars, mages, and warriors, charged with safeguarding the Rift to Nebernoria. However, the emergence of The Weirding has altered both their mission and methods. As reality itself frays, the Keepers now face threats not only from Nebernoria's astral entities but from the strange anomalies spreading across Ryndor. Weird Zones near the Rift distort time and space, complicating the tasks of maintaining wards and documenting findings.

The scholars struggle to keep pace with the unstable nature of the Rift, as discoveries become erratic and sometimes dangerous. Artifacts retrieved from the Rift are now laced with unpredictable Weirding energy, leading to unexpected phenomena and mutations. The mages bolster the magical wards not only to block malevolent entities but to contain the surges of reality-warping energy that threaten to spread into the city of Eveltoft. Some among them have begun to experiment with new forms of astral magic, though these efforts carry risks of corruption.

The warriors face new challenges as astral creatures grow stronger and more unpredictable, mutated by The Weirding's influence. They train tirelessly, preparing for encounters that defy logic, where space shifts beneath their feet and time loops create strange echoes of battles.

The Keepers now operate with increased secrecy from their hidden fortress, as both the public and rogue factions grow suspicious of their activities. Tensions rise between the Keepers and the Crystal Scholars, with some whispering that exposure to the Rift has begun to corrupt the Keepers themselves. Yet, the Keepers remain loyal to their charge, willing to do whatever it takes to safeguard the Rift, knowing that if the balance tips too far, Ryndor itself could unravel.

The Holmean Magical Creature Society

The Holmean Magical Creature Society is dedicated to the study, preservation, and ethical management of Ryndor's magical creatures, headquartered on the island of Holmea. They collaborate with scholars, Sev'rinns, and drake trainers from Wyrmbost, focusing on endangered species and monitoring the effects of Primordial Resonance. However, The Weirding has introduced unforeseen challenges, further complicating their mission.

Many creatures have begun to display bizarre mutations—some become more aggressive, others develop strange abilities, and certain fauna now resonate with astral energies, warping ecosystems. The Society works tirelessly to contain and study these mutations, but the unpredictable nature of the Weirding forces constant adaptation. They have expanded their focus to include astral incursions, as creatures born from the Rift wander into Ryndor, disrupting local ecosystems and threatening native species.

The Society also combats the illicit trade of Weird-touched creatures. These mutated beings are highly sought after on the black market, prized for their unpredictable properties and dangerous allure. Their efforts are critical to preventing the spread of unstable creatures throughout Ryndor. Teams of researchers and conservationists now venture into Weird Zones, recording changes and retrieving creatures before they are exploited.

Through it all, the Society remains committed to balancing exploration with preservation. They work alongside the Crystal Scholars to predict and mitigate Weirding effects on fauna, ensuring that Ryndor's magical ecosystems can survive this strange new era. Yet, the Society knows that every encounter with the Weirding carries risks, as even the creatures they protect may become something unrecognizable.

Geography & Resources

Geography

Ryndor's volcanic origins shape its dynamic landscape, from lava fields and natural hot springs to black sand beaches and snow-capped mountains. The arrival of The Weirding has further altered the land—entire villages now lie trapped in slow time zones, caught in endless twilight, while Holmea's islands float mysteriously above the sea, suspended in the thick mists of a powerful Weird Zone.

Ryndor's waterfalls and rivers, harnessed for energy, now run unpredictably. Wind-tunnel channels through Eveltoft bring erratic storms, yet the city thrives on its wind and water power. Ban Mynydd's mining industry still flourishes, with aluminum and iron veins, though miners report strange seismic anomalies deep in the earth—shifting tunnels and creatures emerging from forgotten layers.

While Surreymouth's fishing grounds remain fertile, peculiar fish exhibiting mutations and astral properties have begun to appear, complicating trade. In Wyrmbost, where beasts are bred to work alongside the people, hybrid Fire Wyrms show signs of new behavior patterns influenced by astral energies. The city's few crops struggle, as time fractures create erratic growing seasons, making food management more challenging than ever.

Holmea, once thought uninhabitable, now floats ominously above the ocean, surrounded by mist and twisting gravity anomalies. While the smaller islands remain barren, they serve as launching points for expeditions into the strange heights of Holmea's floating isle—a place that defies conventional laws of time and space.

The people of Ryndor adapt, but The Weirding has embedded uncertainty into every aspect of life. Progress and survival demand resilience, as the forces of magic, nature, and technology increasingly warp under this strange new reality.

Natural Resources

Ryndor's natural wealth lies in its rivers, waterfalls, and powerful winds, but even these familiar resources have not escaped the influence of The Weirding. Eveltoft, the windiest city in the region, sits within a volatile wind tunnel between two mountains. While the city's wind and water power once brought reliable prosperity, unstable currents and storms caused by Weird Zones have made energy harvesting unpredictable. Sudden wind shifts can overload turbines, and rivers occasionally flow backward or run dry overnight, forcing engineers to constantly adapt to the shifting elements.

In addition to wind, water, and geothermal energy, Ryndor's mineral veins provide crucial resources. Ban Mynydd thrives on its aluminum and iron mines, but miners have begun reporting strange anomalies deep underground—entire shafts vanish, and veins shift positions seemingly overnight. Some believe astral energies are slowly permeating the earth, turning once-stable resources unstable. Miners rely on the assistance of miniature hybrid Fire Wyrms, bred in Wyrmbost, to navigate these treacherous conditions. However, these beasts have begun showing signs of mutation, sometimes growing extra limbs or exhibiting unexpected magical abilities—an unsettling byproduct of prolonged exposure to Primordial Resonance.

While the southern fishing grounds off Surreymouth remain a vital source of food, the ocean has been affected by the unpredictable influence of the Weirding. Strange mutated sea creatures have been caught, some glowing with astral energy, others poisonous or capable of slipping between dimensions. This makes fishing a more dangerous task, though nearly inexhaustible food resources continue to flow from the sea to feed Ryndor's population.

Beyond Ryndor, Nebernoria's rare resources are in high demand but have become more perilous to extract. Nebernite, a prized mineral used to create potent magical artifacts and potions, has grown even harder to locate. Astral storms and time fractures in Nebernoria make mining operations unpredictable, with some expeditions never returning. Those who do return often find their nebernite deposits altered or corrupted, giving the material strange and often volatile new properties.

Neberbloom, a rare and sought-after plant, is also affected by The Weirding. Known for its ability to absorb and store magical energy, the plant has mutated alongside its environment. Some blooms exhibit strange behavior— releasing waves of raw magic when disturbed or shifting to different planes without warning. Extracting neberbloom requires not just expertise but significant caution, as improperly harvested specimens can warp the surrounding landscape or trigger dangerous magical surges.

The Weirding's pervasive influence has made Ryndor's natural wealth both a blessing and a curse. While the land still provides, its gifts are increasingly unpredictable, volatile, and dangerous. Every harvest, whether from the sea, the mines, or the Rift, is a gamble, and only those bold enough to adapt can hope to thrive in this new, strange world.

Society & Culture

Society and Culture

The Society and Culture of Ryndor is as diverse and multifaceted as the land itself, shaped by the interplay of traditions, economy, and competition. Cities like Eveltoft and Wyrmbost boast vibrant festivals and public competitions, with sports being both entertainment and symbolic of regional pride. Currency flows through the hands of merchants and nobles alike, with coins such as the Fimbulmynt and Hrafnmynt forming the lifeblood of trade. Holidays tied to celestial events punctuate the year, while cultural practices reflect regional identities and ancient customs, grounding the people in both heritage and ambition.

Seasons and Celebrations

Winter's Requiem marks the beginning of the year in Ryndor. The first month of the calendar marks the arrival of winter, with the three moons visible in the night sky, each with its unique shape and color. The people of this place have learned to brace themselves for the harsh weather that accompanies the arrival of this month. The nights are long, and the temperatures drop dramatically, covering the land in a blanket of snow and ice. Most of the animals retreat to their burrows or hibernate during this time, making food scarce. The people light fires in their hearths, gather around to share stories and huddle together to keep warm. It is a month of survival, of conserving energy, and of preparing for the long winter ahead.

Frost's Grip The second month of winter is marked by the coldest and harshest weather of the year, with the sun barely visible on the horizon during the day. As the icy winds howl across the land, the people of Ryndor huddle close to their hearths and wrap themselves in thick furs. The harsh weather makes travel difficult and dangerous, and many choose to stay close to home during this month.

The mountains and forests are blanketed in snow and ice, creating a stunningly beautiful but treacherous landscape. Despite the hardships of this month, the people of Ryndor are a hardy and resilient people, and they take pride in their ability to weather even the harshest of winters.

Thaw's Promise As winter begins to lose its grip, the people of Ryndor look forward to the promise of spring, with the sun rising higher in the sky and the moons becoming more prominent. Thaw's Promise is the third month of the Ryndorian calendar, and it marks the time when winter begins to lose its grip on the land. The days start to grow longer, and the temperature slowly begins to rise. Although the snow and ice still cover the ground, signs of new life start to appear. The first buds on trees and bushes begin to appear, and the frozen streams and rivers start to thaw. The people of Ryndor feel a sense of hope and renewal as they anticipate the coming of spring. They start to prepare for the planting season, knowing that the promise of new growth and abundance is just around the corner.

Spring's Awakening The fourth month of the Ryndorian calendar is Spring's Awakening, which marks the arrival of spring in the land of Ryndor. As the snow melts away, the trees begin to bud, and the flowers start to bloom, filling the air with their sweet fragrances. Birds return to the forests and fields, and the animals that have been hibernating throughout the winter start to emerge from their burrows. The people of Ryndor celebrate the return of the sun and the promise of new life, eagerly preparing for the warmer months to come.

As for holidays, the most significant event in Ryndor is the Frostmoon Festival, which takes place in mid-winter, around the time of the winter solstice. It is a celebration of the changing of the seasons and the rebirth of the sun. People light bonfires and lanterns to symbolize the returning light, and they exchange gifts and feasts. Other holidays include the Harvest Festival in autumn and the Spring Equinox Festival in spring.

Frostmoon Festival. This is a three-day festival that celebrates the first snowfall of the year. Many people hold feasts and bonfires, and there are often competitions and games held to mark the occasion. It is also a time when people honor their ancestors and loved ones who have passed away, and many visit graveyards to leave offerings of food and drink.

Winter Solstice. This is the shortest day of the year, and it is celebrated with the lighting of candles and fires to symbolize the return of the light. Many people also exchange gifts and hold feasts to celebrate the end of the old year and the beginning of the new.

Culture

Ryndorian culture is diverse and varied, with different regions having their own unique traditions and customs. However, there are some common threads that tie all Ryndorians together.

Family is highly valued in Ryndorian culture, with close-knit extended families often living together in multi-generational households. Marriage is also an important institution, with arranged marriages being common in some regions. Respect for elders and ancestors is another key aspect of Ryndorian culture, with many rituals and festivals dedicated to honoring those who have come before.

Art and music are highly valued in Ryndorian culture, with many communities having their own distinct styles of music and dance. Storytelling is also a revered tradition, with many myths and legends passed down through generations.

Hard work and perseverance are highly valued in Ryndorian culture, with many communities being self-sufficient and relying on agriculture or artisanal crafts for their livelihoods. Craftspeople and artisans are highly respected for their skills and creativity.

Magic

Magic in Ryndor is a deeply ingrained part of the culture, with many individuals having the ability to perform magical feats to varying degrees. Magic is respected and revered, but also feared, as it is known to have the potential to cause great harm if not wielded responsibly.

Many people in Ryndor view magic as a gift, with those who are born with magical abilities often seen as chosen by the gods. As a result, those with magical abilities are often held in high regard, with some even being seen as spiritual leaders or advisers to rulers. However, there is also a great deal of superstition surrounding magic, with some people believing that those who possess magical abilities are cursed or possessed by demons.

There are also many different types of magic in Ryndor, each with its own set of practitioners and traditions. Some types of magic, such as healing magic, are widely accepted and even encouraged, while others, such as dark magic, are feared and often outlawed. Despite this, many practitioners of dark magic still exist, often operating in secret or under the guise of other professions.

Sev'rinns

In Ryndor, Sev'rinns hold great cultural significance as powerful magic wielders and spiritual leaders. Sev'rinns are those who experienced The Spark, and chose to pursue training in their natural gifts. They are respected members of society, often sought out for their advice and guidance on matters both mundane and mystical. Sev'rinns are known for their ability to communicate with the spirits of the natural world and the ancestors, and are often called upon to perform rituals and ceremonies to honor these spirits.

The training of a Sev'rinn is a long and arduous process, requiring both natural talent and extensive study of magical theory and practice. Sev'rinns are expected to adhere to a strict code of ethics, which emphasizes the responsible use of their powers and a deep respect for the spirits and the natural world. As such, Sev'rinns are often seen as stewards of the land and the keepers of ancient wisdom, and play a vital role in maintaining the balance between the physical and spiritual realms in Ryndor.

Religion

Religion in Ryndor plays a vital role in the cultural identity and spiritual lives of its people. Much like magic, faith is deeply respected—seen as a source of both hope and guidance. The gods of Ryndor, though distant and mysterious, are believed to influence the world in subtle ways, lending their power to those whose convictions burn brightest. Yet, as with magic, religion is also viewed with a mix of reverence and fear, for divine blessings can be fickle, and some believe the gods' attention comes at a price.

The people of Ryndor view faith not as a passive belief but as an active relationship with the divine, requiring devotion, rituals, and offerings. Priests and spiritual leaders are highly respected, often serving as advisers to rulers and counselors to the community. Religious festivals and ceremonies are woven into the rhythms of life, marking the changing seasons, the rise and fall of kingdoms, and the phases of celestial bodies. In some cities, shrines are built atop ancient ley lines or near astral anomalies, believed to channel divine energy more effectively.

However, as with magic, the influence of faith varies. Different gods and traditions hold sway in different regions, and worship practices reflect the unique local cultures and needs. In the coastal city of Surreymouth, sailors offer prayers to gods of the sea, while the druids of Wyrmbost revere nature spirits and conduct rites to honor the balance between the elements. Some gods are gentle and benevolent, while others are demanding or wrathful, rewarding loyalty and punishing betrayal with equal measure.

The Weirding has further complicated the nature of faith. Miracles are no longer always distinguishable from magical anomalies, and divine visions have grown increasingly strange—cryptic dreams, disjointed prophecies, and fragmented symbols. Some believe that the gods are responding to the disruption of the astral plane, while others fear that even the divine is no longer beyond the Weirding's reach. Clergy and prophets struggle to interpret these signs, leading to rifts between religious sects as they debate the meaning behind these new occurrences.

Despite this uncertainty, religion remains a powerful force, shaping the political landscape and cultural practices of Ryndor. Faith is not simply a way to understand the unknown—it is a tool for survival, a source of strength, and for many, a beacon of hope amid the growing chaos of the Weirding. Those who walk the path of faith do so knowing that the gods' favor is as unpredictable as the world they inhabit, but they continue their devotions, believing that even in times of strangeness and upheaval, the divine will guide them toward a greater purpose.

Social Customs

The people of Ryndor take great pride in their traditions and social customs, viewing them as essential threads in the intricate tapestry of their society. These practices foster trust, community, and connection, grounding individuals in their shared history and cultural identity, even as the world shifts around them. In a land where magic, technology, and faith collide—and where The Weirding constantly disrupts reality—customs serve as anchors of stability, offering comfort and continuity amidst the chaos.

Ryndorian customs reflect both the diversity of its people and the influences of the land itself, which is shaped by ancient forces and turbulent histories. From the Rite of the Open Hand—a gesture of trust rooted in a tradition of diplomacy—to the Whispered Promise, which binds strangers with sacred commitments, Ryndor's customs help foster bonds of friendship and peace. In times of instability, these shared rituals become even more important, offering a way to navigate uncertainty together.

Communal practices, such as the Giving Grove, highlight the value Ryndor places on collective well-being and generosity. The tradition of planting, tending, and sharing the bounty of these sacred gardens symbolizes a commitment to sustaining both the land and the community. Likewise, rites of farewell and birth ceremonies underscore the importance of life cycles in Ryndor's culture—marking transitions, honoring ancestors, and embracing new beginnings. Each custom, whether it involves fire, flight, or rooting in the earth, reflects the unique values and identities of Ryndor's many races and regions.

As The Weirding continues to spread across the land, distorting the familiar, some customs are beginning to evolve, while others hold firm against the shifting tides. Communities find new ways to preserve their traditions, even when strange phenomena disrupt rituals or alter outcomes. These customs remain essential in anchoring Ryndorians to what matters most: their connections to one another, their reverence for life, and their ability to adapt in a world where change is the only certainty.

The Rite of the Open Hand

In some regions, it is customary for individuals to greet each other by extending their right hand palm-upward. This is seen as a sign of trust and respect, indicating that they are not holding any weapons or harmful intentions. Refusing to offer an open hand is considered a grave insult and could lead to mistrust or even violence. After the Rite is completed, it is customary for the participants to engage in the Whispered Promise.

The Rite of the Open Hand also serves as a way to foster peaceful relations between neighboring communities. It is common for representatives from different towns or villages to participate in the Rite together as a means of strengthening ties and establishing trade agreements. It is said that in the past, wars and conflicts between Ryndorian communities were often resolved through the completion of a Rite of the Open Hand followed by the Whispered Promise, as the act of coming together and making the sacred pledge of nonviolence was seen as a powerful way to end hostilities and forge a lasting peace.

The Whispered Promise

In many regions of Ryndor, it is customary to make a whispered promise when greeting someone for the first time. This promise is usually a commitment to aid the other person in some way if they ever need help. The act of making the promise is seen as a way to establish trust and build a bond of friendship between strangers.

Another aspect of the Whispered Promise is that it is meant to be kept secret between the two individuals who made it. It is not to be shared with anyone else, not even close friends or family members. Breaking this trust is considered a grave offense and could result in social ostracism.

In some communities, the Whispered Promise is seen as a spiritual practice, a way of connecting with the divine through the act of making a commitment to another person. It is believed that the sincerity and purity of the promise will be rewarded by the gods, and that those who keep their promises will receive blessings and good fortune in their lives. As such, the Whispered Promise is not taken lightly, and is considered a sacred bond between two people.

Giving Grove

Many villages and towns in Ryndor have communal gardens known as Giving Groves. Members of the community are encouraged to plant and tend to these gardens, with the understanding that the bounty will be shared with anyone in need. This practice promotes a sense of community and generosity, and helps to ensure that everyone has access to fresh produce.

The Giving Grove is a sacred site that is usually protected by the druids of the area. They believe that the trees in the grove have a spiritual connection to the land and all living beings. As such, the druids consider it their duty to care for the trees and ensure their continued health and vitality. They also believe that the grove has healing properties, and many sick or injured individuals have been brought to the grove to be healed.

The druids of Ryndor have a tradition of holding ceremonies in their Giving Groves during the changing of the seasons. These ceremonies involve offerings of food, flowers, and other gifts to the trees. The druids believe that by making these offerings, they are strengthening their bond with the trees and showing their gratitude for the gifts the trees provide. The ceremonies are also seen as a way to renew the energy of the grove and ensure its continued health and fertility for future generations.

Farewell Vigil

In many regions of Ryndor, it is customary to perform a ritual after the death of a loved one. This ritual involves creating a small effigy of the deceased out of straw, wood, or other natural materials. The effigy is then placed on a small raft or boat, and set adrift in a nearby body of water.

The act of releasing the effigy into the water is seen as a way of symbolically releasing the spirit of the deceased, allowing them to move on to the afterlife. The family and friends of the deceased will often gather together to watch the effigy float away, offering prayers and words of farewell to the departed.

Another common practice after a loved one's death is to create a memorial shrine in their honor. The shrine may be placed in the family home or in a public space, and often includes items that were important to the deceased.

New Life

In many regions of Ryndor, the birth of a new child is celebrated with a special ceremony. This ceremony typically takes place several days after the birth and involves close family and friends of the new parents. The practices are often different based on the race of the child and their family.

Hatching

Drakarim When a new Drakarim child is born, the clan elder breathes a fiery breath onto the child's forehead, marking them with the clan's symbol. The child is then given a name that represents a virtue that the clan values.

Nesting

Leoporin Upon the birth of a new Leoporin child, the family gathers together and creates a special piece of clothing for the baby. This garment is embroidered with symbols that represent the child's ancestry and future potential.

Fledging

Aviari Aviari parents typically perform a ceremonial flight around their nesting area with their newborn child, introducing them to the spirits of the air and asking for their protection and guidance.

Rooting

Cervar When a Cervar child is born, the family carves a wooden figurine that represents the child's spirit animal. This figurine is then placed above the child's crib and is believed to provide protection and guidance throughout their life.

Religion

The world of Ryndor is rich in culture and religion. The people of Ryndor have developed a variety of faiths and traditions, each with their own set of beliefs and practices. Religion plays a significant role in the daily lives of many individuals, providing comfort, guidance, and a sense of purpose. In this section, we will explore some of the primary religions of Ryndor, including their beliefs, practices, and associated cleric domains.

While there is great diversity in the religions of Ryndor, there is also a strong sense of tolerance and respect among the people. Religious differences are rarely a source of conflict, and many festivals and traditions are celebrated across different faiths. However, there are occasional tensions between different religious groups, particularly in areas where different faiths compete for influence or resources.

In Ryndor, there are a variety of people and creatures who do not have a formal religion or belief system. Some of these individuals may be atheists or agnostics who simply do not believe in the existence of gods or higher powers. Others may have been raised in a culture or community that does not place a strong emphasis on religion, and as such they may not have a personal belief system.

There are several organized major religions throughout Ryndor. It is common for Clerics of these religions to proselytize and evangelize their churches by going on faith missions or serving in communities in the name of their faith.

The Cult of the New Moon

The Cult of the New Moon venerates the goddess of the night and the moon. They believe that darkness is a source of power and that the moon's phases represent the ever-changing nature of existence.

Common prayer: "Embrace the darkness within to unlock the power of the moon."

Domains: Trickery and Death

The Order of the Iron Sun

The Order of the Iron Sun worships the god of strength, battle, and craftsmanship. They believe in the power of the forge and the transformative nature of fire.

Common prayer: "Through the forge of battle, we are tempered and made strong."

Domains: War and Forge

The Church of the Golden Harvest

The Church of the Golden Harvest venerates the goddess of agriculture, fertility, and the harvest. They believe in the importance of living in harmony with the natural world and respecting the cycles of growth and decay.

Common prayer: "Bless the soil and the seeds, may the harvest be bountiful."

Domains: Life and Nature

The Brotherhood of the Shattered Mind

The Brotherhood of the Shattered Mind follows the teachings of a deity of secrets, knowledge, and madness. They believe in the pursuit of hidden knowledge and unlocking the mysteries of the universe.

Common prayer: "Unravel the mysteries of the universe and let madness guide our way."

Domains: Knowledge and Madness

The Order of the Everburning Flame

The Order of the Everburning Flame worships a deity of light, truth, and protection. They believe that their deity's light illuminates the darkness and that their protective power shields the innocent from harm.

Common prayer: "May the light guide us through darkness and the flame shield us from harm."

Domains: Light and Protection

Disciples of the Nether

The Disciples of the Nether believe that the rift to Nebernoria is a gift from the deity of the underworld, a powerful being who oversees the flow of souls from the material world to the afterlife.

Common prayer: "Through the Rift we are blessed, in the Nether we find truth."

Domains: Death

Sports & Games

Sports and Games

Ryndor’s love of competition runs deep, with sports and games serving as vibrant expressions of the region’s culture, tradition, and unity. From displays of physical prowess to feats of arcane skill and clever strategy, the people of Ryndor embrace sport as a way to push their limits, foster camaraderie, and honor their history. Whether through ancient contests passed down for generations or newer events shaped by the challenges of the modern era, sporting events bring communities together, offering both entertainment and meaning in an ever-changing world.

While The Weirding has reshaped many aspects of Ryndor, its influence on the realm’s official sports remains contested. Weirded objects, creatures, and phenomena are currently banned from formal competitions, such as the Kigan Uldar and Utfordring tournaments, as officials debate how to safely incorporate these unpredictable elements into the rules. Conversations about their inclusion have become a hot topic among athletes and spectators alike. Some argue that embracing the Weirding reflects the evolving reality of life in Ryndor, while others warn that its unpredictable nature could compromise fairness and safety.

For now, competitions remain traditional—focused on skill, strength, and precision, untainted by the volatile influence of the Weirding. Athletes train hard to master their craft, whether riding the winds of Eveltoft, taming Wyrmbost's beasts, or navigating the hazards of Utfordring's obstacle courses. These events celebrate not just the athletes, but the resilience of the communities that gather to cheer them on and participate in the lively spectacle of sport.

This chapter explores the diverse world of Ryndor's sports, from ancient traditions to emerging conversations about change. Whether you're a competitor preparing to prove your worth, a strategist seeking to master the finer points of the game, or a fan drawn to the thrill of the contest, Ryndor's sports offer a testament to community, dedication, and the joy of friendly rivalry—even as the world shifts under the influence of The Weirding.

Kigan Uldar

Kigan Uldar is a popular sport in Ryndor that combines elements of magic and physical prowess. This sport is played on a large open field or arena, where two teams of four players each compete to score goals by launching a magical orb through a series of floating rings using only their magical or physical abilities. The orb, which is enchanted to emit a fiery glow, is fiercely contested by both teams, and players are allowed to use spells and other magical abilities to try to steal or intercept the orb from their opponents.

The game is played in a fast-paced, high-energy style, with players constantly on the move and employing a wide variety of tactics and strategies to gain an advantage over their opponents. The use of magic adds an exciting and unpredictable element to the game, as players can create illusions, conjure barriers, and perform other feats of wizardry to outmaneuver their opponents.

Kigan Uldar is a highly competitive and physically demanding sport, requiring both speed and agility as well as quick thinking and strategic planning. It is popular among both wizards and non-magical folk in Ryndor, and has become a staple of many local festivals and sporting events.

Rules

Kigan Uldar is a team sport played with two teams of four players each. The objective is to score goals by launching a magical orb through a series of floating rings using only their magical or physical abilities. The game is played on a large open field or arena, which is divided into two halves, with each team defending their own half and attacking the other team's half.

At the start of the game, the orb is placed in the center of the field, and players from both teams rush forward to try and take possession of it. Players are not allowed to touch the orb with their hands or any other body part, and must instead use magical or physical abilities to control it. Non-magic users often use bats, nets, or other tools to take possession of the orb.

The game is played in two halves, each lasting for 30 minutes, with a 10-minute break in between. The team with the most goals at the end of the game wins.

Players are allowed to use a wide range of magical and physical abilities to control the orb and try to score goals. However, there are some rules and limitations to these abilities. For example, players are not allowed to use any spells or abilities that directly harm or injure their opponents. Players are also not allowed to fly or levitate more than three feet off the ground while in possession of the orb.

The game is overseen by a referee, who is responsible for enforcing the rules and making sure that players are playing safely and fairly.

Skyfire League

The name of the league that plays Kigan Uldar professionally is the Skyfire League.

Blaze Brigade This team is known for their aggressive playstyle and their ability to use powerful offensive spells to dominate their opponents.

Frost Giants The Frost Giants are known for their defensive prowess, often using their magic to create icy barriers to protect their goal.

Thunderbolts This team is known for their lightning-fast speed and quick reflexes, often scoring goals before their opponents even know what happened.

Shadow Strikers The Shadow Strikers are a mysterious team, often cloaked in darkness and using illusion spells to confuse their opponents.

Ironclads The Ironclads are a physically imposing team that relies on their brute strength and toughness to push their way through their opponents' defenses.

Utfordring

Utfordring s a team sport played in the shallow waters near the coast, and is popular among fishermen and sailors.

In this sport, teams of 6 players compete to collect as many magical pearls as possible from the bottom of the ocean floor within a set time limit. The pearls are scattered throughout a designated area and are guarded by a variety of dangerous sea creatures, both magical and mundane.

Players wear enchanted diving suits that provide them with enhanced mobility and protection against the dangers of the deep, and they are allowed to use spells and magical items to fend off any hostile sea creatures they encounter. Each player on the team has a specific role, such as the diver, the navigator, and the collector, and they must work together to overcome the obstacles and gather as many pearls as possible.

The team with the most pearls at the end of the game is declared the winner, and they are awarded a prize that could include anything from magical treasures to a feast of exotic and fresh seafood. The Reef's Challenge is a thrilling and unpredictable sport that combines strategy, skill, and bravery, and is a beloved pastime for many coastal communities in Ryndor.

Rules

Utfordring is a team water sport in which teams of 6 players compete to collect as many magical pearls as possible from the bottom of the ocean floor within a set time limit. The game takes place in a designated area of the ocean, which is marked off by buoys and is typically several acres in size. The pearls are scattered throughout this area and are guarded by a variety of dangerous sea creatures, both magical and mundane.

Before the game begins, each team selects one player to act as the diver, one player to act as the navigator, and four players to act as the collectors. The diver is responsible for swimming to the bottom of the ocean to retrieve the pearls, while the navigator directs the team from the surface, using a magical compass to locate the pearls. The collectors work to fend off any hostile sea creatures that may try to attack the diver and gather any pearls that the diver retrieves.

Each player on the team wears an enchanted diving suit that provides them with enhanced mobility and protection against the dangers of the deep. They are also allowed to use spells and magical items to fend off any hostile sea creatures they encounter. However, players must be careful not to damage the pearls, as any pearls that are damaged will not count towards the team's final score.

The game typically lasts for one hour, and the team with the most pearls at the end of the game is declared the winner. In the event of a tie, the team that retrieved the largest pearl is declared the winner. The winning team is awarded a prize that could include anything from magical treasures to a feast of fresh seafood.

Utfordring is a thrilling and unpredictable sport that combines strategy, skill, and bravery. It requires players to work together as a team to overcome the obstacles and gather as many pearls as possible. It is a beloved pastime for many coastal communities in Ryndor and is often played as part of local festivals and celebrations.

League of the Deep

The name of the league that plays Utfordring professionally is the League of the Deep.

Storm Surge Hailing from the northern coast, this team is known for their fearless approach to the game and their ability to navigate especially treacherous waters.

Reef Raiders This team is renowned for their exceptional teamwork and coordination, allowing them to collect pearls quickly and efficiently.

Leviathan's Reach Based in the depths of the ocean, this team is known for their physical strength and ability to overpower even the toughest of sea creatures.

Ocean's Chosen This team from the western coast of Ryndor is revered for their magical prowess and their ability to manipulate the tides and sea creatures to their advantage.

Kraken's Grasp This team from the southern coast is feared for their aggressive play style and their willingness to take risks to secure the win, often resulting in high-scoring games.

Glowstones
Number of Players: 2-6
Game Length: 30-60 minutes
Materials Needed:
1. Glowstones: A set of 36 colored stones in six colors (6 stones per color: red, blue, green, yellow, white, and black).
2. Glowstone Deck: 54 cards divided into three categories:
- Action Cards: Manipulate stones (e.g., Swap, Steal, Add).
- Event Cards: Introduce random effects (e.g., "Color Surge" or "Reverse Flow").
- Trap Cards: Played secretly to disrupt opponents' plans.
3. 6 Dice: One 6-sided die for each color (matching the stones).
4. Player Tokens: One for each player to track individual point totals.
5. Game Board: A grid with six slots for stones (one slot for each color) and a score tracker.
6. Betting Tokens (Optional): For tavern or gambling variants, where players bet on outcomes.

Setup
1. Distribute Glowstones: Place all 36 glowstones in a draw bag or bowl.
2. Deal Starting Hands: Each player draws 5 cards from the Glowstone Deck.
3. Prepare the Board: Lay out the game board with six empty color slots (one for each color).
4. Turn Order: Players roll their dice. The highest roller goes first, with play proceeding clockwise.

How to Play
Each game of Glowstones consists of rounds. During each round, players take turns performing actions to manipulate the stones on the board. The goal is to match colors or manipulate the board to achieve specific point thresholds. Points are scored by completing color sets (three or more matching stones in a row) or achieving a high-value combination.

Turn Structure
On a player's turn, they perform the following steps:
1. Draw a Glowstone: Draw a random stone from the bag and place it on the appropriate slot on the board (e.g., a red stone goes to the red slot). If the slot is already full (with 3 stones), place it on any other open slot.
2. Play a Card: The player can choose to play one card from their hand.
- Action Cards: Modify the stones on the board (swap, steal, or add stones).
- Trap Cards: Played face-down and triggered later to disrupt another player's turn.
- Event Cards: Introduce random effects that affect all players (e.g., shuffle the stones, reverse turn order).

3. Optional Action - Roll the Glowstone Dice: Players may roll a die matching the stone color they just placed.

- If they roll a 6, they earn bonus points for that color.
- If they roll a 1, the stone becomes unstable, and they must remove a stone of the same color from the board.

4. Bluff or Pass: Players may choose to bluff, pretending to have powerful cards or high-scoring strategies, or pass to avoid suspicion. Bluffing is crucial because some cards can only be played if another player challenges them.

Scoring Points

Points are awarded at the end of each round based on the glowstones placed on the board.

- 3 stones of the same color in a row: 5 points
- 4 stones of the same color in a row: 8 points
- A set of all 6 colors: 12 points
- Bonus points: Earned by rolling a 6 on the Glowstone Dice during a turn (+3 points)

At the end of each round, the stones are reset, and a new round begins.

Winning the Game

The game continues until one player reaches 25 points or until all the stones have been used. The player with the most points at the end of the game wins. If there is a tie, the tied players each draw one glowstone from the bag, and the player with the highest-value stone (based on color rarity) wins.

The Weirded Variant (Optional)

In the underground version of Glowstones, Weirded glowstones are used. These stones shift colors mid-game, making them unpredictable and creating additional challenges.

Special Rules for Weirded Glowstones:

- At the start of each player's turn, roll a Weird Die (a d6).
- 1-2: A random glowstone on the board changes color.
- 3-4: The current player must discard a card from their hand.
- 5-6: Nothing happens—play continues normally.

While the Weirded version adds chaos and excitement, it also increases the difficulty—leading to higher stakes and more dramatic comebacks. Official Glowstone tournaments ban this variant, but it thrives in taverns and underground circles where unpredictability is part of the fun.

Example Cards

1. Swap Stones – Swap any two stones on the board.
2. Color Surge – Add a second stone of the same color you just placed.
3. Trap: Shattered Bond – The next player loses their turn.
4. Event: Reverse Flow – Reverse the turn order until the end of the round.

5. Sneak Steal – Secretly take one stone from the board and hold it for yourself.

Game Variants

- High Stakes Variant: Players use betting tokens to wager on the outcome of each round.
- Timed Play: Each player has only 30 seconds per turn to act, increasing tension.
- Cooperative Variant: Players work together to achieve the highest score against a shared deck of random events.

Fashion

High Fashion of Eveltoft

Eveltoft, as the heart of Ryndor's politics, trade, and magic, is a city of opulence and expression, where fashion is both a statement of status and an art form. Incorporating pragmatism and layered design, combined with textile elegance and symbolic ornamentation, the high fashion of Eveltoft is as diverse as its inhabitants, with each race contributing unique elements to the city's sartorial identity. Nobles, merchants, and scholars alike use their attire to showcase wealth, lineage, and personal achievement.

Humans

Elegance through Practicality

Humans in Eveltoft blend utilitarian cuts with ornate embellishments, showcasing their adaptability and influence across Ryndor.

- Silk-Lined Wool Cloaks: High-status humans wear woolen cloaks lined with silk, secured with jade or obsidian brooches. Patterns on the cloaks are embroidered to represent family crests and achievements.
- Layered Robes with Fur Trims: Their formal attire consists of layered robes over high-collared tunics, with subtle hints of wolf or bear fur at the cuffs and collars. This combination offers both warmth and sophistication.
- Statement Sashes and Belts: Wide silk sashes are tied over the tunics, embroidered with personal mottos or ancestral stories. They are often paired with leather belts adorned with intricate knotwork buckles.
- Jewelry with Function: Humans favor bracelets and rings crafted from bronze and iron, with embedded runes for protection. Practicality is key—many accessories have hidden pouches for small items or vials of herbs.
- Structured Caps and Face coverings: In the colder and windier areas of Ryndor, it is very common to see tall, fur lined caps structured and boxy, with silky face coverings attached with buttons or straps.

Elves – Ethereal Simplicity with Symbolic Depth

The elves of Eveltoft express their connection to magic and nature through flowing fabrics and symbolic motifs. Their fashion is graceful and minimalist, but laden with meaning.

- Flowing Silk Tunics and Sleeveless Robes: Their clothing features layered silk garments, dyed in soft greens, golds, and blues to mimic natural elements like water, wind, and sunlight.
- Embroidered Mythological Creatures: Elven garments are embroidered with delicate, swirling designs of dragons, birds, and flowers that are said to offer protection and good fortune.
- Feathered and Beaded Hair Adornments: Elves incorporate feathers, beads, and fine silver chains into their hairstyles, often braiding them into long locks or wearing them as delicate headpieces.
- Barefoot with Ornamentation: Many elves go barefoot, using anklets and toe rings adorned with jade or obsidian, signifying their connection to the land and sky.

Dwarves – Precision and Craftsmanship

The dwarves of Eveltoft take great pride in their metalworking and craftsmanship, and their clothing reflects their mastery over materials.

- Lamellar Vests and Metal-Stitched Cloaks: High-fashion dwarves wear lamellar vests made of overlapping metal plates, polished to reflect the light. Their cloaks are often stitched with thin metal threads or adorned with small medallions.
- Earth-Tone Tunics and Trousers: Dwarves prefer practical clothing in muted earth tones—browns, grays, and deep reds—accented by decorative belts and cuffs. Their garments are durable but elegant, reflecting their connection to the earth.
- Heavy Jewelry and Beard Beads: Dwarves love heavy jewelry—thick necklaces, ornate rings, and intricately carved beard beads that show off their lineage. Gold, silver, and obsidian are favored materials.
- Boots with Runic Soles: Sturdy boots feature runes engraved on the soles for protection and good fortune. These boots are both practical for underground travel and stylish for formal events.

Sev'rinn – Elemental Expression

The Sev'rinn use their fashion to reflect their magical affinities and personal connection to elemental forces. Their attire shifts based on which element they most embody—fire, water, air, or earth.

- Color-Shifted Fabrics: Their clothing uses enchanted fabrics that change colors in response to environmental changes. A water-aligned Sev'rinn's robes might shift from deep blue to shimmering silver in the rain.
- Flowing Outerwear: Sev'rinn favor loose, billowing garments, such as robes and capes, that respond to the wind, mimicking the natural flow of elements around them.
- Masks and Veils: Many Sev'rinn wear decorative masks or veils, symbolizing their connection to unseen forces. These are often adorned with crystals or gemstones, channeling magical energy.
- Bare Feet or Soft-Soled Sandals: Earth-aligned Sev'rinn often go barefoot, while others wear soft-soled sandals with elemental patterns engraved on the straps.

Cervar – Nature-Woven Garments

The Cervar, a race connected to nature, weave their clothing directly from plants, moss, and vines, incorporating living elements into their outfits.

- Living Cloaks and Tunics: Their garments are partially alive, with flowering plants or glowing fungi woven into their sleeves. These materials symbolize growth and renewal.
- Vine-Wrapped Jewelry: Cervar wear bracelets, anklets, and chokers made from vines and roots, decorated with small leaves or blossoms.
- Natural Color Palette: Their clothing reflects seasonal colors—greens and browns in spring, fiery reds and oranges in autumn.
- Symbolic Antlers and Crowns: High-status Cervar wear wooden antler crowns, decorated with feathers and stones, marking their connection to nature's wisdom.

Aviari – Ornate Layers and Flight-Inspired Designs

The Aviari, with their feathered features and winged heritage, design their clothing to enhance movement and reflect their connection to the sky.

- Feathered Epaulettes and Capes: Their garments feature epaulettes and capes lined with feathers, creating an ethereal, flowing effect.
- Lightweight Silk and Leather: Aviari prefer lightweight materials, combining leather vests with silk undershirts to allow for mobility.
- Gliding Sleeves: Some Aviari garments feature wide, gliding sleeves that catch the wind as they move, mimicking wings.
- Intricate Wing Designs on Jewelry: Their rings and necklaces often depict winged motifs, symbolizing freedom and exploration.

Leoporin – Playful Patterns and Practicality

The Leoporin, a rabbit-like race, balance comfort and charm in their fashion, favoring layered tunics and short capes for agility.

- Bright Colors and Playful Patterns: Leoporin garments feature vibrant patterns, such as polka dots or geometric designs, reflecting their playful nature.
- Layered Scarves and Sashes: Many Leoporin wear layered scarves wrapped around their necks, secured with decorative pins.
- Soft Leather Boots: Their boots are designed for quiet movement, made from soft leather with padded soles.
- Earrings and Charms: Leoporin love small charms and trinkets worn as earrings or attached to their belts, symbolizing personal milestones or lucky items. It is common to see Leoporin with cities with heavily adorned ears, encrusted with charms and jewels.

Fashion and Status in Eveltoft

Fashion in Eveltoft is not merely about aesthetics—it reflects personal achievement, social status, and magical alignment. The city's citizens use clothing to signal alliances, rank, and ambition, with nobles and scholars wearing inscribed sashes or symbolic accessories that declare their status and affiliations. Special seasonal festivals require elaborate ceremonial outfits, and citizens are judged by the richness of the fabrics and the intricacy of the details in their attire.

Through this blend of Norse resilience and Chinese elegance, the people of Eveltoft express their identity and pride. Every thread, gemstone, and accessory tells a story—a story woven into the intricate tapestry that is the culture of Eveltoft.

Balance of Forces

In Ryndor, the forces of magic, religion, and technology are intertwined in a complex and ever-changing struggle for dominance. Primordial Resonance, the source of all magic, offers power to those who can wield it—yet it is finite, forcing careful management. Religion provides divine power through belief, but its influence depends on the conviction of the faithful. Technology, born from ingenuity, serves as an equalizer, blending magic and science to empower even the mundane. The balance between these forces is never static, with shifts in power shaping the fate of nations and individuals alike.

Magic

Magic in Ryndor is a finite resource, drawn from Primordial Resonance, a volatile energy that exists in the friction between the material world and the astral plane. The energy is not endless—each spell or magical act consumes resonance, creating scarcity over time. Overuse of magic in one area can lead to a resonance drought, leaving practitioners powerless until the flow naturally returns. Players must learn to manage resources wisely, as their actions have lasting effects on the magical ecosystem.

Casting magic influences the environment in subtle and dramatic ways. When resonance is disturbed, it can result in astral storms, magical anomalies, or dead zones where magic becomes unreliable or ceases to function entirely. Some areas may experience wild surges of energy, empowering spells beyond expectation, while others may drain a mage's power without warning. Players need to understand that their spells are not without consequence—reckless casting risks destabilizing the world itself.

d10	Effect
1	Astral Storm. Arcane winds whip through the area, causing unpredictable spell effects.
2	Resonance Drought. Magic becomes inert, rendering spells impossible to cast for hours or days.
3	Arcane Wildfire. Flames fueled by magic spread uncontrollably, consuming both magical and mundane materials.
4	Temporal Slip. Time flows inconsistently—hours pass in moments, or minutes stretch for days.
5	Planar Bleed. Creatures or objects from the astral plane temporarily manifest in the world.

| 6 | Nullification Pulse. A sudden anti-magic wave depletes spellcasters of all magical energy. |

| 7 | Magical Mutation. Local flora or fauna transform into strange, enchanted forms. |

| 8 | Resonance Surge. Spells cast in the area become more powerful but unstable, with unintended side effects. |

| 9 | Reality Fracture. Small objects float or disassemble, defying physics.|

| 10 | Haunting Echoes. Faint whispers or apparitions appear, remnants of magic long past.|

The Rift to Nebernoria introduces further complexity, acting as both a boon and a curse for magic users. In proximity to the Rift, magic becomes stronger but more volatile—simple spells may yield extraordinary results, or fizzle unexpectedly. Practitioners venturing too close to the Rift risk exposure to astral influences, which could alter their abilities or leave them vulnerable to planar corruption. Navigating these unpredictable energies requires careful planning, especially in areas saturated with astral resonance.

Finally, magic in Ryndor plays a pivotal role in culture and politics, influencing alliances, trade, and governance. Factions like the Crystal Scholars seek to control and understand resonance, while remnants of the Ullac Regime trade in forbidden anti-magic technologies to suppress magical power. Some societies treat magic as sacred, woven into religious practices, while others fear its instability. Players will encounter both reverence and hostility toward magic, with their characters' decisions shaping how the world responds to their power.

Sev'rinns

The Sev'rinns are powerful practitioners who draw their magic from Primordial Resonance, each bound to a unique Essence ignited during a personal event known as The Spark. Once rulers of Ryndor, Sev'rinns now play diverse roles—from healers and scholars to adventurers and revolutionaries. Their presence evokes both reverence and fear among ordinary citizens, embodying the unpredictable nature of magic. This section delves into their traditions, history, and evolving place in modern society, as well as the potential challenges—and opportunities—they bring to those they encounter.

Traditions

The Sev'rinns are deeply woven into the history and culture of Ryndor, with traditions that reflect their role as both guardians and practitioners of magic. Central to their heritage is the Hilderturgy, an ancient rite by which elder Sev'rinns passed their knowledge and elemental mastery to the next generation. Though the tradition waned with the rise of the Ullac Regime, it is now being revived on the floating island of Holmea, where the Skola—a new academy for Sev'rinns—trains initiates in their elemental Essences.

At the heart of each Sev'rinn's journey lies The Spark, a pivotal moment in childhood when exposure to a specific element ignites their magical potential. This experience determines their primary Essence—whether fire, water, air, or spirit—and shapes their abilities throughout life. This moment is celebrated as a sacred event among the Sev'rinns, marking not just the start of their training, but their alignment with the forces of creation and destruction.

Sev'rinns hold a variety of roles in society, from advisors and healers to combatants and ritualists. They are both revered and feared for their power, sought after by noble houses and factions, yet often distrusted for the instability that accompanies magic. Some Sev'rinns use their abilities for diplomacy and protection, while others become mercenaries or hermits, following their own path. This duality reflects the essence of magic itself: neither good nor evil, but shaped by the heart of the one who wields it.

In Society

For an average citizen of Ryndor, encountering a Sev'rinn can evoke a mix of awe, reverence, and unease. Sev'rinns carry the weight of ancient magic, and their presence suggests both potential power and danger. While some Sev'rinns serve as healers, advisors, or protectors, others walk more mysterious paths, disconnected from societal norms. Many citizens respect or fear their abilities, knowing the volatility of Primordial Resonance. Interactions often depend on the Sev'rinn's personal demeanor—ranging from inspiring guidance to unsettling reminders of the fragility of magic.

Sev'rinns in Modern Ryndor

| Name | Essence | Role in Society | Notable Contribution or Influence |

|---|---|---|---|

| Dara Valesh | Muza (Water) | Diplomat and Negotiator | Brokered peace treaties between coastal factions |

| Kaelen Drust | Huon (Fire) | Renowned Blacksmith | Crafts magical weapons for noble houses |

| Liora Fen | Sorash (Sky) | Airship Captain and Explorer | Leads expeditions through Rift anomalies |

| Jasrik Rune | Atmani (Spirit) | Spiritual Leader of the Keepers of the Rift | Guides rituals to safeguard the Rift |

| Eryn Thalor | Ishin (Stone) | Architect of Ban Mynydd | Designs structures to contain magical surges |

| Tala Mierin | Ziran (Nature) | Environmental Activist | Protects magical creatures from exploitation |

| Vesra Kaid | Kala (Time) | Historian and Archivist | Preserves ancient knowledge from the Sev'rinn archives |

| Oryn Velas | Muza-Sorash (Water/Sky) | Pirate Lord | Controls trade routes through air and sea |

| Saren Jorath | Keiton (Space) | Astral Researcher | Studies the Rift's dimensional effects |

| Rhael Vinn | Atmani (Spirit) | Wandering Healer | Offers aid to outlying settlements without allegiance |

Religion

The world of Ryndor is rich in culture and religion. The people of Ryndor have developed a variety of faiths and traditions, each with their own set of beliefs and practices. Religion plays a significant role in the daily lives of many individuals, providing comfort, guidance, and a sense of purpose. In this section, we will explore some of the primary religions of Ryndor, including their beliefs, practices, and associated cleric domains.

While there is great diversity in the religions of Ryndor, there is also a strong sense of tolerance and respect among the people. Religious differences are rarely a source of conflict, and many festivals and traditions are celebrated across different faiths. However, there are occasional tensions between different religious groups, particularly in areas where different faiths compete for influence or resources.

In Ryndor, there are a variety of people and creatures who do not have a formal religion or belief system. Some of these individuals may be atheists or agnostics who simply do not believe in the existence of gods or higher powers. Others may have been raised in a culture or community that does not place a strong emphasis on religion, and as such they may not have a personal belief system.

There are several organized major religions throughout Ryndor. It is common for Clerics of these religions to proselytize and evangelize their churches by going on faith missions or serving in communities in the name of their faith.

The Cult of the New Moon

The Cult of the New Moon venerates the goddess of the night and the moon. They believe that darkness is a source of power and that the moon's phases represent the ever-changing nature of existence.

"Embrace the darkness within to unlock the power of the moon."

Domains: Trickery and Death

The Order of the Iron Sun

The Order of the Iron Sun worships the god of strength, battle, and craftsmanship. They believe in the power of the forge and the transformative nature of fire.

"Through the forge of battle, we are tempered and made strong."

Domains: War and Forge

The Church of the Golden Harvest

The Church of the Golden Harvest venerates the goddess of agriculture, fertility, and the harvest. They believe in the importance of living in harmony with the natural world and respecting the cycles of growth and decay.

"Bless the soil and the seeds, may the harvest be bountiful."

Domains: Life and Nature

The Brotherhood of the Shattered Mind

The Brotherhood of the Shattered Mind follows the teachings of a deity of secrets, knowledge, and madness. They believe in the pursuit of hidden knowledge and unlocking the mysteries of the universe.

"Unravel the mysteries of the universe and let madness guide our way."

Domains: Knowledge and Madness

The Order of the Everburning Flame

The Order of the Everburning Flame worships a deity of light, truth, and protection. They believe that their deity's light illuminates the darkness and that their protective power shields the innocent from harm.

"May the light guide us through darkness and the flame shield us from harm."

Domains: Light and Protection

Disciples of the Nether

The Disciples of the Nether believe that the rift to Nebernoria is a gift from the deity of the underworld, a powerful being who oversees the flow of souls from the material world to the afterlife.

"Through the Rift we are blessed, in the Nether we find truth."

Domains: Death

Astrology

In Ryndor, Nebernorian astrology has resurfaced as a blend of numerology and celestial magic, drawing from ancient astral practices. Rooted in the alignment of cosmic forces, this discipline interprets patterns in stars, planets, and numbers as reflections of fate and potential. Practitioners believe that celestial configurations influence both personal events and grand societal shifts, providing insight into the ebb and flow of power. Numbers and constellations are used to divine the future, guide important decisions, and harness astral resonance for subtle magical influence.

Though traces of Nebernorian astrology have woven their way into Ryndorian society as numerology and star charts, few outside of Nebernoria fully grasp its true mechanics—or whether it meaningfully interacts with the other energies of Ryndor, such as Primordial Resonance. To most Ryndorians, this practice remains a mystery cloaked in celestial symbolism, believed to influence personal fate or divine cosmic patterns. Scholars and mystics attempt to interpret these astral arts, but only the Nebernorians understand their deeper purpose—if there is one at all.

Technology

In Ryndor, technology stands as a powerful equalizer, harnessing magic, science, and even religious energy to reshape society. Once driven by the Ullac Regime, technological advancement now operates in a delicate balance with magic, giving rise to arc-weapons, automaton sentinels, and airships. Despite the regime’s collapse, nullification engines—devices that suppress magic—continue to circulate through black markets, allowing non-magical factions to wield power.

The fusion of technology and magic has unlocked vast potential, but not without consequences. Industrial centers like Ban Mynydd thrive on smelting and production, while innovations in Holmea blend magic with mechanical precision. However, the rise of arcane-powered machines has strained both environmental and magical resources, leading to concerns about sustainability.

In this new age, factions like the Crystal Scholars seek to balance progress with preservation, while former regime loyalists exploit technology for control. As airships roam the skies and automata patrol city streets, the people of Ryndor walk a fine line between prosperity and collapse, knowing that technology, like magic, is only as good —or dangerous—as those who wield it.

Major Technologies of Ryndor

Modern Ryndor showcases the blending of magic and science, giving rise to powerful technologies that reshape society:

- Arc-Weapons: Blades and firearms imbued with magic, enhancing both combat prowess and precision.
- Airships: Massive vessels powered by arcane currents and engines, essential for trade, exploration, and warfare.
- Automaton Sentinels: Clockwork constructs used to patrol cities and enforce security.
- Astral Scanners: Devices employed by Crystal Scholars to monitor resonance surges and astral anomalies.
- Modular Prosthetics: Advanced limbs with magical enhancements, offering strength and precision to those in need.

These innovations reflect the evolving interplay between magic and technology, expanding possibilities while demanding careful balance and control. You can find more specific technologies and devices in the Reliquary appendix.

The Underground Market

Although the Ullac Regime has fallen, its technological legacy lives on in the shadows. The remnants of military inventions, arc-weapons, automaton blueprints, and experimental devices are now traded through black markets. These illicit hubs are particularly active in cities like Eveltoft and Ban Mynydd, where factions and individuals seek to reclaim or repurpose old technologies for personal gain. The Crystal Scholars monitor these trades closely, wary of dangerous devices resurfacing. However, controlling the flow of this technology is nearly impossible, as smugglers and rogue inventors constantly adapt.

The Weirded Lands

In this chapter, we journey through Ryndor's diverse lands, each shaped not only by its history and culture but also by the unpredictable effects of The Weirding. While bustling cities and remote villages still thrive, many have been transformed by strange phenomena—time fractures trap towns in endless days, rivers shift course without reason, and some communities have become isolated within Weird Zones, lost to the flow of normal reality.

As you travel through Ryndor, you'll encounter mutated creatures, warped landscapes, and altered customs—reminders that the familiar world is slipping into something far more surreal. Villages adapt to the flow of Primordial Resonance as they navigate warped seasons and unexpected changes in magic. This guide offers insight into the customs and survival strategies of each settlement, highlighting how communities thrive, struggle, or fall apart in this new era. Whether you seek adventure, trade, or knowledge, these Weird Lands hold both wonders and dangers in equal measure.

Abbernusker Lake

Abernnusker Lake

Weird waters below the Dragon Mount

At the base of Mt. Bannockwyrm, where shadow and mist coil around jagged cliffs, lies the mysterious Abernnusker Lake—a body of water now irrevocably altered by the Weirding. Meaning "Obsidian Peak" in the ancient tongue, Abernnusker was once rumored to be the birthplace of the legendary dragon Fafnir, who guards a vast treasure hoard hidden deep within the mountain. But since the spread of the Weirding, the lake has taken on a sinister life of its own, warping both reality and legend into something new and unpredictable.

Waters Twisted by the Weirding

The lake's frigid, black waters have become a wellspring of strange phenomena, as though they no longer reflect only the material world but bleed into Nebernoria's astral depths. Strange lights drift beneath the surface, flickering like stars submerged in the abyss. Fishermen swear they see shimmering cities in the water, impossibly distant landscapes whose structures shift and dissolve when approached. Those who stare too long into the lake report vivid, dream-like visions—fragments of other lives or alternate realities that linger long after they leave the shore.

Currents beneath the lake seem to flow out of sync with time, dragging objects—and even people—into strange eddies where hours or years can pass in an instant. Some say that fish pulled from the depths are marked with glowing runes or speak in alien tongues before they expire, further deepening the lake's mystery. Locals avoid the waters entirely now, warning that those who swim too close to the lake's center risk becoming lost between worlds, vanishing without a trace.

New Monsters in the Deep

The creatures that haunt Abernnusker's depths have also changed since the Weirding began. Local legends still tell of a giant obsidian-scaled serpent that prowls the cold waters, but now some claim the beast can split into multiple forms, existing in several places at once. Malevolent water spirits known as nixes have grown more aggressive, no longer content to simply drag swimmers to their doom. Witnesses describe the nixes as distorted figures, with faces that flicker between multiple forms—often resembling loved ones or long-lost travelers.

Even stranger things have been spotted beneath the lake: enormous, translucent creatures that seem half-formed, as though caught between two realms. Some believe these are astral constructs from Nebernoria, pulled through a rift at the bottom of the lake. Bioluminescent flora, glowing in shifting hues of violet and green, drift across the surface at night, and strange birdlike creatures circle the water's edge, croaking ominous songs in alien tones.

Ardal Plains

Ardal Plains

The Sacred Grasslands

The Ardal Plains, stretching between Wyrmbost and Leighmore, are a land steeped in legend and magic, though its beauty hides the harshness of life beneath the open skies. According to ancient lore, the Fen elves once called these plains home, treating them as a sacred sanctuary for the natural world. The Fen were believed to be guardians of nature, and travelers passing through Ardal would leave offerings in hopes of receiving their protection and blessings. Even now, some visitors still honor this tradition, placing tokens beneath ancient standing stones or whispering thanks into the wind.

Abernnusker Lake, the heart of the Ardal Plains, carries its own mythology. Legend says it was formed by the tears of a Fen princess, forbidden from marrying her true love. The lake's waters are said to possess powerful healing properties, drawing pilgrims from across Ryndor who seek renewal and blessings. Though no Fen have been seen for centuries, the mystical reputation of the lake endures. Locals say that during quiet moments, the surface reflects not the sky, but glimpses of other realms, hinting that perhaps the Fen's influence lingers.

A Land of Beauty and Tragedy

Despite its tranquil appearance, the Ardal Plains are not untouched by conflict. During the Torgarian War, the plains witnessed brutal battles between rival clans, leaving the land scarred with memories of violence. It is said that the ghosts of fallen warriors still wander the plains, whispering on the wind, watching the living with unseen eyes. Even today, travelers speak of a chill unease in certain areas, as if the past clings to the landscape like a shadow. Some who camp on the plains report hearing voices, faint and distant, carried by the ever-present wind.

Life on the Ardal Plains

The Ardal Plains are sparsely populated, their windswept grasslands and jagged rocks making life here a challenge. Those who do call the plains home are rugged and self-reliant, living off the land and weathering the harsh seasons with quiet resilience. Hunting, herding, and farming sustain most communities, and the rhythms of life are dictated by the changing seasons. In winter, the land becomes unforgiving—icy winds cut across the grasslands, and families hunker down in their homes, surviving off stockpiled provisions. Despite these hardships, the people of Ardal are deeply connected to their land and proud of their heritage, wearing their scars as marks of honor.

The Annual Kigan Uldar Crown

The Annual Kigan Uldar Crown is one of the most celebrated sporting events in Ryndor, and the Ardal Plains are the perfect backdrop for this prestigious tournament. Taking place over three intense days, the championship draws the best teams from across the land to compete for the coveted title.

Though the Weirding has begun to affect other parts of Ryndor, official Kigan Uldar competitions on Ardal remain untouched—for now. Discussions about allowing Weirded artifacts or mutated creatures into future games stir controversy, but the Ardal Plains offer an unspoiled stage for tradition to thrive. Teams engage in fast-paced competitions of strength, strategy, and endurance, drawing crowds of fans who set up makeshift camps across the plains to witness the spectacle. For three days, the plains come alive with celebration, competition, and camaraderie, making the Kigan Uldar Crown an event that unites Ryndor in a rare moment of joy.

The Ardal Plains serve as both a reminder of Ryndor's turbulent past and a celebration of its resilient spirit. From the mystical waters of Abernnusker Lake to the fierce competitions of Kigan Uldar, the land weaves together stories of hope, sorrow, and strength—a place where the echoes of the past shape the possibilities of the future.

Arvanthwaite Woods

Arvanthwaite Woods

The Danger Wood

The Arvanthwaite Woods, nestled along the northwestern coast of Ryndor, have long been regarded as a gift from the elven gods. The towering trees, some of the oldest and most powerful in the land, have stood for centuries, their roots entwined with ancient magic and forgotten secrets. For generations, the elves of Ryndor have lived in reverence and harmony with the forest, treating it as a sacred sanctuary and defending it fiercely against those who would cause it harm.

Yet, as The Weirding spreads across Ryndor, even the ancient woods are not immune to its influence. Strange energies have begun to ripple through the roots and canopies, reshaping the very essence of the forest. The sentient trees, once wise guardians, now stir with unpredictable intentions, sometimes attacking intruders with frenzied force—even those who mean no harm. Twisting paths seem to change direction with each step, and travelers risk getting lost in temporal loops, emerging days—or years—after they entered. Some trees hum with low, otherworldly melodies, as if singing the echoes of distant realms.

The elves, though deeply connected to the woods, find themselves in conflict with the shifting nature of the forest they have vowed to protect. The magic that once flowed predictably through Arvanthwaite now pulses with unsettling irregularity. Spirits that once guided travelers have grown hostile, lashing out at anything they do not recognize. Druids and fey beings still dwell deep within the woods, but even they seem changed—stranger, wilder, and more dangerous. Some whisper that the Weirding has awakened ancient beings slumbering beneath the forest floor, beings that predate the elven gods themselves.

Life in Arvanthwaite Woods

Living within the unpredictable expanse of the Arvanthwaite Woods is more challenging than ever. The elves who call this forest home have long understood how to navigate its dangers, but now they must adapt to new anomalies brought on by the Weirding. Sentient trees, once guardians and allies, occasionally become violent or uncommunicative, leaving even experienced elves to tread carefully. Paths that were familiar for generations now shift unpredictably, requiring constant vigilance to avoid temporal traps or strange rifts.

Despite these challenges, the elves remain resilient and deeply connected to the forest's magic. They have developed methods of communicating with the trees, learning to recognize when a particular grove has been distorted by Weirded energies. Some trees display new magical properties, offering strange fruits or glowing bark that can enhance spells—but only at a cost. Elven communities live in hidden sanctuaries, woven into the trees themselves, blending with the natural world to avoid detection. These sanctuaries are protected not only by elven magic but also by the forest's own unpredictable defenses.

Elves of the Arvanthwaite Woods continue their vow to protect the forest, though they must now defend it against forces beyond mortal control. They walk a fine line between reverence and wariness, knowing that the forest they love is no longer entirely what it once was. Some embrace the changes, seeking to understand the new magic born of the Weirding, while others resist—working tirelessly to return the woods to their original state, though that may no longer be possible.

A Forest of Wonders and Dangers

The creatures of Arvanthwaite have also been changed by the Weirding. Fey beings, once playful tricksters, have become unpredictable and dangerous, their pranks escalating into deadly games. Animals once familiar to the elves now exhibit strange mutations—stag-like creatures with glowing antlers, or wolves that seem to step between dimensions in pursuit of their prey. Elven rituals, once used to maintain balance in the forest, now yield unpredictable results, sometimes conjuring unintended entities from the astral plane.

Abernnusker Lake, the heart of the woods, is said to pulse with new, unstable magic. While the lake's waters once offered healing and blessings, they now carry a risky volatility. Some who drink from the lake experience visions of the past or future, while others become lost in a waking dream, unable to distinguish reality from illusion. Yet pilgrims still venture to the lake, drawn by the hope of ancient miracles or the chance to unlock the secrets of the Weirding.

Travelers are strongly discouraged from venturing into the Arvanthwaite Woods without a knowledgeable guide, for the forest is no longer a passive place of beauty—it is alive, aware, and ever-changing. The elves offer their protection to those they trust, but warn that even they cannot fully control the forest's whims. Each step through Arvanthwaite's depths is a journey through mystery and peril, where ancient magic and new anomalies blend, creating a landscape as wondrous as it is dangerous.

In the era of the Weirding, Arvanthwaite Woods stand as a testament to both nature's resilience and unpredictability—a place where history, magic, and the unknown intertwine. Those who enter the woods must be prepared for anything, for what they find within may change them forever.

Ban Mynydd

Ban Mynydd

The Forge of Ryndor

A dense aura of mystery clings to Ban Mynydd, a walled city that thrives amidst darkness and secrecy. Second only to Eveltoft in population, Ban Mynydd's inhabitants rarely leave, and those who visit often disappear without a trace. The Weirding has taken hold deep within the city's labyrinthine mines, twisting time, space, and reality. Beneath the surface of Ryndor, the once-ordinary mining tunnels now lead to unpredictable places—sometimes ending abruptly or looping endlessly, and at other times emerging into forgotten realms or alternate timelines.

Life in Ban Mynydd revolves around these unstable tunnels, but no one is certain what lies at their deepest points anymore. The Weirding's influence has warped both the creatures dwelling within and the minerals mined from the earth. Shards of reality fold into the gemstones, creating unpredictable effects—some beneficial, others disastrous. Time shifts erratically underground, with miners reporting they have worked for hours only to return to find mere moments have passed on the surface—or, in some cases, years. Entire mining teams have emerged decades later, unaware that time outside had moved on without them.

The Weirded Mines of Ban Mynydd

The city's labyrinthine tunnels descend far below Ryndor's surface, now infused with fragments of the Weirding. Strange pulses of energy ripple through the rock, creating shifts in gravity and matter. Miners rely on modified drilling technology and arcane devices to navigate the treacherous depths, but even these tools are unreliable in the ever-changing tunnels. Some corridors bend back on themselves, while others open unexpectedly into pockets of elemental chaos, where fire, water, and strange energies from Nebernoria collide in unstable bursts.

Miners are trained to avoid the strange anomalies that float through the caverns—pockets of warped air that displace sound and time. Those caught within these anomalies return disoriented or changed, with memories of futures that have not yet come to pass or visions of alternate versions of themselves.

Hybrid beasts—morphed by exposure to the Weirding—now prowl the tunnels, their forms flickering between physical states. Even the fire wyrms bred to assist miners have begun to display strange behaviors, developing additional limbs or glowing with erratic bursts of magical energy.

Life in Ban Mynydd

The enclosed city of Ban Mynydd clings stubbornly to its traditions, though the Weirding has reshaped much of daily life. Entire districts fluctuate between different phases of time, creating disjointed routines where markets open and close unpredictably, and citizens wake to find buildings where none stood before. Visitors need permits issued by the Custodians of Prosperity to enter the city, but those permits carry little guarantee of safe passage through the mines or stability within the city itself. The city's gates are closed tightly against unannounced travelers, as officials fear the unpredictable consequences of further exposure to external Weirding influences.

Ban Mynydd has become a haven for artificers and arcane scientists seeking to understand and harness the effects of the Weirding. Some experiment with the strange minerals extracted from the tunnels, believing they hold the key to stabilizing reality or developing powerful new technologies. However, these endeavors carry enormous risk, as objects infused with the Weirding can behave unpredictably—tools suddenly evaporating, or timepieces skipping forward days without warning.

Despite the risks, the wealth of the city remains unmatched. Merchants and adventurers alike are drawn by the promise of rare gems, ancient relics, and enchanted minerals, even though many of those treasures are rumored to carry strange curses or latent magic that could awaken at any time.

The Custodians of Prosperity: Guardians of Unstable Wealth

The Custodians of Prosperity—formerly the Empyreal Bank—occupy an imposing fortress within Ban Mynydd, housed behind Ryndor's thickest walls to protect both the city's wealth and its secrets. With the rise of the Weirding, the Custodians have shifted their focus from mere currency management to stabilizing the financial chaos caused by temporal distortions. The Frostmark, the region's currency, is vulnerable to fluctuations in value due to the unpredictable effects of the Weirding—causing rapid inflation, deflation, and strange phenomena where coins age centuries in moments.

The Custodians employ magical wards and nullification fields to safeguard the central vaults and ensure that transactions occur within stabilized zones, free from the influence of the Weirding. However, unauthorized experiments within the vaults have begun to draw scrutiny—rumors abound that the Custodians are hoarding time-warped artifacts, hoping to manipulate the Weirding for financial gain.

The bank is heavily fortified, with its own elite guard force trained to combat weirded creatures and rogue elements that slip through the mines. No visitors are allowed near the lower vaults, which are rumored to contain not only immense treasures but also fractured timelines, where lost miners or forgotten artifacts occasionally emerge from past epochs.

The Hidden Depths and Forbidden Knowledge

Ban Mynydd has become a destination for adventurers seeking lost knowledge or relics of ancient civilizations. Tales circulate of strange discoveries deep within the mines—cryptic machines powered by impossible energies and scrolls inscribed with languages no scholar can decipher. The city's officials deny these rumors, but shadowy figures lurk at the city's edges, offering illicit guides through the Weirded tunnels in exchange for steep payment—or favors not easily repaid.

Despite the danger, treasure hunters persist in their efforts to uncover the forgotten riches rumored to lie in the depths, hoping to recover relics untouched by the Weirding's influence. Some claim to have glimpsed entire cities frozen in time, or relics capable of unraveling the mysteries of the Weirding itself. Few who seek these treasures ever return, but those who do speak of impossible landscapes where gravity bends and time runs backward, warning that the deeper one ventures, the harder it becomes to leave.

A City at the Edge of Madness

Ban Mynydd is a paradox—both fortress and prison, a city rich with treasures but steeped in danger. Its people walk a fine line between innovation and collapse, navigating a world where time itself betrays them and even the most familiar objects can transform into threats. The city is both revered and feared throughout Ryndor, a place where the past, present, and future converge into strange and unpredictable shapes.

As the Weirding continues to ripple through the tunnels beneath Ban Mynydd, the city stands on the edge of transformation. Some believe the Weirding offers untold power, while others fear it could consume the city entirely, leaving nothing behind but temporal echoes and fractured memories. But one thing remains certain—those who step into Ban Mynydd's shadowed depths are never the same when they emerge—if they emerge at all.

Bennard Peak

Benard Peak

The Shattered Heights

The towering rock formation known as Benard Peak, or "Firehouse Neck," stands across from the highest summit of Mt. Bannockwyrm, a monument of stone steeped in legend and shrouded in strangeness. According to ancient tales, the peak was born from a battle between giants and gods. In the heat of battle, the giant chief hurled a colossal boulder at Thor, the thunder god. But with one strike of his mighty hammer, Thor shattered the stone into a thousand pieces. The fragments scattered across the landscape, forming the looming cliffs of Benard Peak and the deep canyon below—a place said to be filled with magic and mischief.

Now, with the spread of the Weirding, Benard Peak has become more than just a site of legend—it has become a place where reality bends and breaks. Travelers climbing the jagged paths often report shifting landscapes, as if the peak rearranges itself when no one is watching. Strange, flickering apparitions—giants, gods, and warriors frozen in moments from forgotten battles—appear within the mist only to vanish without a trace. Some pilgrims say that time itself falters near the summit, with journeys that should take hours stretching into days—or passing by in the blink of an eye.

The Canyon Below: A Realm of Mischief and Madness

The canyon beneath Benard Peak, once home to mischievous gnomes and elusive sprites, has become a chaotic labyrinth of magic and mutation. The creatures that dwell here now bear the marks of the Weirding—gnomes that flicker like candle flames, their forms constantly shifting, and sprites with translucent wings that hum with otherworldly resonance. Even the flora in the canyon has taken on unsettling forms—trees with twisted branches that seem to reach for travelers, and flowers that bloom with a sound rather than scent.

Those brave enough to explore the canyon speak of invisible rivers flowing through the air, carrying not water but whispers of forgotten conversations. Adventurers have stumbled upon pools of reflective mist, showing memories that do not belong to them—or sometimes visions of futures they wish not to see. Locals warn that the deeper one ventures into the canyon, the more the world around them twists, as though the land is remembering too many versions of itself all at once.

The Sacred Summit and Its Unpredictable Blessings

Benard Peak remains a sacred site for those seeking divine guidance, though now the blessings of the gods are tinged with uncertainty. Offerings left at the summit—stones etched with runes, flowers woven with charms, and carved wooden figurines—sometimes shift in form or vanish entirely, only to reappear elsewhere on the peak. Some pilgrims claim their prayers are answered, though not always in the ways they expected—blessings sometimes twist into curses, and boons often arrive with hidden costs.

The locals, though wary, continue their pilgrimages, believing that even in its unpredictability, the Weirding holds a kind of truth. Many say that the gods' attention has become fragmented, their influence intertwined with the shifting magic of the land. Pilgrims are advised to make their offerings carefully—for while the gods may still grant favor, the price of their blessings has become unknowable.

Navigating the Fractured Pathways

Climbing Benard Peak is not for the faint of heart. The paths leading to the summit twist and warp, with trails that double back upon themselves or vanish entirely, leaving travelers lost among the craggy cliffs. Strange weather patterns, fueled by the Weirding, plague the ascent—lightning strikes without thunder, and snow falls from a clear sky, only to melt into pools of warm mist at the travelers' feet. Some climbers claim to have met versions of themselves on the trail, offering warnings—or invitations they dare not accept.

Guides from nearby villages carry charms and talismans, believing these offer some protection against the Weirding's influence. They caution climbers to stay close and move quickly, for the longer one lingers on the trail, the more likely they are to attract the attention of strange forces. Stories of lost adventurers—wanderers who stepped off the path only to never be seen again—are told often, serving as grim reminders of the peak's shifting nature.

Benard Peak: A Place of Power and Peril

Despite the dangers, Benard Peak continues to draw adventurers and pilgrims, all seeking something—answers, blessings, or simply the thrill of discovery. The peak remains a place of profound mystery, a point where the mortal world and divine power collide. Yet now, with the spread of the Weirding, the truths hidden within the mountain are harder to grasp. What once seemed like fixed legends—the clash of giants and gods, the creation of stone and canyon—now shift and change, as if the stories themselves are unraveling.

Benard Peak stands as a testament to both power and uncertainty. Here, among the shattered cliffs and haunted canyons, the line between reality and myth grows thin. To climb the peak is to step into the unknown, to face not only the forces of the past but the strange possibilities of the future. In a world touched by the Weirding, even the stone remembers things that never happened, and the winds whisper songs no one ever sang.

For those who dare to ascend the peak, the journey offers no guarantees—only the promise of transformation, for better or worse. At Benard Peak, where gods, giants, and strangeness meet, every step forward is both a prayer and a risk, and every offering a bargain with forces that do not obey mortal rules.

Eveltoft

Eveltoft

The Crystal Capitol

Following the Sev'rinn Rebellion, Eveltoft rose from the ashes of war to become a beacon of progress and unity, with the Sev'rinn Council guiding the city toward an era of innovation and magic-fueled rebuilding. But as Eveltoft prospered, the early tremors of The Weirding began to ripple through its streets. Magic and technology, once harmoniously intertwined, are now behaving unpredictably—bridges shift, canals flow in strange directions, and buildings subtly twist over time.

The Weirding effects have transformed the city into a realm both beautiful and uncanny. Parks bloom with strange flora that glow with astral hues, and the occasional magical storm sweeps through, disrupting public events and festivals. Citizens now walk alongside odd manifestations—astral shadows, rogue enchantments, or strange objects that awaken briefly before falling inert again. The city's vibrant cultural scene and bustling marketplaces remain at the heart of life, though a lingering unease settles among the people as the familiar bends toward the unfamiliar.

Despite its achievements, Eveltoft now faces new challenges. Weird Zones—areas where reality feels frayed—appear without warning, particularly in the poorer districts, where magical anomalies have intensified existing inequalities. The city's leadership has launched research initiatives with the Crystal Scholars to contain these effects, but progress is slow. The Council must balance progress with caution, knowing that the very magic that brought Eveltoft to greatness now threatens to unravel it from within.

Yet, Eveltoft's citizens endure. Festivals continue, trade flourishes, and even amid uncertainty, the people cling to their hope for a better future. As The Weirding spreads, Eveltoft remains a symbol of the complex dance between magic, technology, and survival, standing proudly at the edge of a reality transformed.

Life in the City

Eveltoft, the largest metropolis in Ryndor and the economic heart of the isles, remains a hub of commerce, culture, and innovation—but The Weirding has left its unsettling mark. Built atop the ruins of an ancient civilization, towering buildings and busy marketplaces now shift in subtle, eerie ways. Winding streets may bend differently each day, and the once well-organized districts are sometimes warped by spatial anomalies. Merchants and craftsmen still fill the bustling streets, but the air buzzes with rumors of weird occurrences—spontaneous enchantments or goods that behave strangely after passing through Weird Zones.

The city's diverse population continues to thrive, but life has become unpredictable. Law enforcement and guilds wrestle not only with crime but with the dangers of astral disruptions. The Merchants Guild warns of goods spontaneously decaying or transforming, while the Craftsmen's Guild experiments with strange materials pulled from warped areas. The city guard patrols Weird Zones, knowing that even a quiet alley could suddenly shift into an astral rift, dragging those inside into an unpredictable danger.

Life in Eveltoft is now a thrilling balance between opportunity and peril. Taverns and theaters brim with stories of strange events—bards sing songs about traders lost in time loops and objects awakening under Weirding influence. Rival factions use these anomalies to their advantage, further intensifying political intrigue. Yet, even amid this chaos, the people of Eveltoft remain resilient and proud, embracing their city’s strange transformation as a beacon of survival, innovation, and change in a world bent by magic and uncertainty.

Eveltoft’s districts were not always part of the grand metropolis that now spreads across the foothills and waterways beneath the shadow of the Bannockwyrm Mountains. Each district began as an independent settlement—a fishing village here, a trade outpost there, and an isolated sanctuary hidden in the forests. Over time, as Eveltoft grew in wealth, power, and influence, it absorbed these outlying communities, weaving them into the fabric of a unified city. The process was one of both opportunity and upheaval, creating a city that is as diverse as it is sprawling.

Central District

The Central District

Heart of Power and the Rift

At the core of Eveltoft lies the Central District, where political authority, commerce, and the strange energies of the Rift to Nebernoria converge. Once home to bustling government offices, markets, and cultural hubs, the Central District has become the focal point of Ryndor's most daring technological experiment—containing the Rift's Weirding effects within powerful nullification fields. These fields are powered by the hydro engines of the Fenchong Falls, which cascade down the cliffs beneath the grand Eveltoft City Hall. The City Hall itself is a feat of engineering, built directly over the roaring waterfall, as if to remind the people of Eveltoft that the flow of power never ceases.

The Rift Contained—But Not Conquered

The nullification fields surrounding the Rift are state-of-the-art marvels, capable of suppressing the Rift's unpredictable magic. Large turbines beneath the falls generate hydroelectric power, driving the machinery that keeps the fields operational day and night. Without this constant energy, the Weirding would spread unchecked, warping space and time throughout the district. Even with the containment, the Rift's presence hums in the air—a faint, unsettling vibration that leaves citizens feeling slightly out of sync with reality.

The fields are not perfect, however. Every so often, fluctuations in the waterfall's flow cause momentary interruptions, during which strange phenomena slip through. On such occasions, objects vanish and reappear elsewhere, clocks behave erratically, and brief portals to unknown locations flicker open, exposing curious glimpses of Nebernoria's astral landscapes. Citizens call these incidents "Rift Reverberations", and while most are harmless, they serve as a reminder of the immense power just barely held in check.

Life in the Central District

Living and working near the Rift demands both resilience and caution. Government officials, merchants, and citizens alike have adapted to the peculiar energy of the district, though paranoia and strange behaviors are not uncommon. The Rift creates an atmosphere of constant vigilance, as even those who believe in the safety of the nullification fields feel the unease of dwelling beside the unknown.

Despite the looming presence of the Rift, the Central District thrives. Trade agreements and diplomatic pacts are signed within the grand halls of Eveltoft City Hall, while bustling markets just beyond the Rift's containment sell goods both mundane and arcane. Merchants from across Ryndor come here not only for commerce but also in hopes of glimpsing something extraordinary—an object or artifact briefly altered by the Weirding, or a fleeting view of Nebernoria's eerie horizon.

Maintaining the Fields: A Race Against Time

The hydro engines that power the nullification fields require constant maintenance. The waterfalls are unpredictable, with seasonal shifts occasionally causing disruptions to the flow. Maintenance crews work tirelessly to prevent breakdowns, knowing that even a momentary lapse could result in catastrophe. Sev'rinn engineers and scholars often assist, using their magic to stabilize machinery or predict fluctuations in the Weirding's influence. Still, accidents happen, and every disruption offers a fleeting glimpse into the chaos the Rift could unleash.

Rumors persist of black market deals involving engineers or officials willing to disable the nullification fields for a price, hoping to steal something valuable from Nebernoria's influence. The Crystal Scholars keep a close watch over the district, but leaks and failures are inevitable, given the complexity of the system. Few can resist the allure of secrets from beyond the Rift, even when the risks are immense.

Eveltoft's Central Nexus: The Meeting of Forces

With the Rift at its heart, the Central District has become a place where all the great forces of Ryndor collide—magic, technology, and ambition interwoven in a fragile balance. The Council Chambers within City Hall are a battleground for debate, with factions vying to control the Rift's resources. Some argue for greater exploration of Nebernoria, while others fear the consequences of further tampering with forces beyond comprehension.

This district symbolizes both progress and peril, a reflection of Eveltoft's ambition to master the unknowable. The Rift grants the city access to incredible resources and arcane knowledge, yet every discovery carries a cost. Can Eveltoft control the Weirding indefinitely, or will the Rift's influence continue to erode the boundaries between worlds, making the city's heart the first to falter?

A City Caught Between Realities

The strange relationship between the Rift and the city grows deeper with each passing year. The Central District's residents have grown accustomed to odd temporal glitches, such as encountering people they've already spoken with earlier in the day or seeing events unfold out of sequence. Occasionally, messages arrive before they are sent, and some claim to have met their future selves wandering the streets in moments of Rift instability.

Meanwhile, the Fenchong Falls flow on—a symbol of Eveltoft's determination to harness nature's power and contain the strange forces leaking from Nebernoria. But how long the city can maintain this delicate equilibrium remains uncertain. As technology and magic converge, and as the Rift tests the limits of containment, the people of the Central District walk a fine line between order and oblivion.

Whether the Rift is a boon or a curse is a question yet unanswered, but one thing is clear: the heart of Eveltoft beats in time with forces not of this world, and every pulse carries the potential for either revelation or ruin.

Chipping-Gong District

Chipping-Gong District

Woodlands at the edge of the crystal city

Named for the legendary bear that once roamed the forests nearby, Chipping-Gong has long served as the lumber and woodworking heart of Eveltoft. While the sounds of axes chopping wood and the whir of saws still fill the air, the Weirding's creeping influence has begun to alter both the craft and the forest itself. Now, amidst timber yards and carpentry shops, visitors may catch glimpses of the strange, as both tools and timber behave unpredictably, and the forest whispers secrets only the most attentive can hear.

A Forest Touched by the Strange

Chipping-Gong sits on the outskirts of Eveltoft, where the forests once offered abundant resources—but the Weirding has changed the way the land provides. Trees sometimes grow overnight, forming unnatural patterns in their bark that seem like arcane glyphs. Lumberjacks report that fallen trees shift location by morning, and some timber, when cut, releases a brief gust of fragrant mist that leaves hallucinations in its wake.

Though some fear the forest's increasing unpredictability, others see the opportunity within the anomaly. Strange, twisted Weirdwood has become a coveted material, with patterns shifting beneath the grain like a flowing river. Items crafted from Weirdwood are believed to contain latent magic, although prolonged exposure is rumored to alter their owners' thoughts or dreams. Visitors to Chipping-Gong are encouraged to wander the woods, but never alone, for paths have been known to loop endlessly, trapping the unwary in strange, time-lost pockets.

Craftsmanship in a Shifting World

The woodworkers and carpenters of Chipping-Gong are among the most skilled in Eveltoft, but even they must now adapt to the quirks of the Weirding. Tools sometimes refuse to obey commands, saws cut at angles no one intended, and completed items occasionally shift shape or function without warning. The district's finest craftsmen now incorporate charms and protective wards into their workshops, ensuring that their creations remain stable—at least for a while.

Some craftsmen have embraced the change, using Weirdwood and other affected materials to create dynamic, living pieces—chairs that shift to fit the sitter, carvings that grow new details on their own, and furniture that seems to rearrange itself when no one is watching. These enchanted goods fetch high prices, though buyers are warned: no one knows how long the magic will hold.

Living Architecture: Buildings with Minds of Their Own

Chipping-Gong has long been known for its innovative wooden architecture, but in the era of the Weirding, wooden buildings have taken on a life of their own—sometimes literally. Some of the tallest wooden structures in the city now creak and shift subtly at night, changing their layout slightly, as if trying to express something unsaid. Visitors on guided tours may notice new carvings appearing on walls or stairways shifting position, though the locals insist that these changes are harmless—so far.

Builders in Chipping-Gong are experimenting with Weirded timber in architecture, creating structures that react to changes in the environment. Walls tighten against storms and floors soften underfoot, responding to the presence of people and weather. However, these experiments are not without risk—several unfortunate incidents have occurred where houses sealed their occupants inside or refused entry to strangers, their wooden frames acting on some unknown whim.

Markets and Merchants Amid the Anomaly

Despite its strangeness, the Chipping-Gong marketplace remains a lively center of commerce. Merchants flock here to purchase lumber and wooden goods, though now the market also sells Weirded artifacts—objects carved from wood that might shift in purpose, shape, or sound without warning. Visitors to the market often encounter vendors selling protective wards against the strange effects, or guides offering maps that claim to help navigate the shifting streets.

Handmade wooden toys, once the pride of the district, now carry an air of unpredictability—puppets that sing forgotten songs, dolls that whisper riddles when touched, and wooden animals that sometimes blink when no one is watching. While these enchanted curiosities attract collectors and tourists, locals remain wary of such goods—many refuse to keep them in their homes, fearing what they may become.

A Community Embracing Change

Though the Weirding has altered Chipping-Gong in unsettling ways, the residents remain resilient. The district's craftsmen and lumberjacks have learned to work with the strangeness, adapting their skills to an ever-shifting world. For many, the Weirding is just one more challenge—a new opportunity to innovate and create in ways that defy the ordinary.

At night, the district comes alive with music and conversation. Locals gather in taverns built from Weirded timber, where flickering carvings dance on the walls and songs change mid-verse, as if influenced by some distant, unseen force. It is said that some residents have begun to understand the strange rhythms of the Weirding, using them to predict subtle shifts and find fortune where others see only chaos.

A District of Tradition, Innovation, and Anomaly

Chipping-Gong stands as a symbol of both tradition and transformation, a district where ancient craftsmanship meets the unpredictable magic of the Weirding. The people of Chipping-Gong do not resist the change—they adapt, innovate, and thrive, finding ways to balance stability with spontaneity.

In this corner of Eveltoft, axes swing, saws hum, and wood takes on new life. Whether you're visiting for the furniture, the architecture, or the strangeness, Chipping-Gong offers an experience that is both rooted in the past and forever shifting toward the unknown. Here, timber speaks, and craft becomes magic—if only for those brave enough to listen.

Dogun District

Dogun District

Your one-stop for shopping, food, entertainment—and unpredictable anomalies!

The Dogun District of Eveltoft, long celebrated for its bustling markets and vibrant cultural scene, has become both a commercial hub and a zone of strange happenings in the wake of the Weirding. While it remains one of the city's most popular destinations, visitors must now navigate not just lively streets but shifting spaces and fleeting phenomena—oddities that make every trip to Dogun an adventure. Shops, restaurants, and theaters still thrive, but unpredictable twists of reality ensure that no two visits are ever the same.

A Market Transformed by the Strange

Dogun's famous marketplace continues to thrive, but strange sights are becoming increasingly common. Vendors report merchandise changing color, flavor, or function unexpectedly—silk scarves turn to metal in the rain, spices shift to different tastes mid-cooking, and customers have occasionally purchased objects that vanish entirely by nightfall. Some shops embrace the chaos, marketing themselves as "Weird Shops," offering goods that promise both delight and surprise.

Merchants have also learned to adapt—those with connections to magical artisans now create items that can shift and adjust to the Weirding's influence. Meanwhile, temporary stalls pop up overnight, selling bizarre trinkets and relics that disappear by morning. Rumor has it these stalls are run by beings touched by the astral plane, though no one has ever confirmed where the stall-keepers go once their wares vanish.

A Cultural Scene in Flux

Dogun's artistic and creative heart beats on, though the Weirding has deeply influenced the district's artists, musicians, and performers. Paintings now seem to move subtly when viewed from certain angles, music resonates with odd harmonies that echo long after the notes end, and performances change in ways that even the actors cannot explain—dialogue rewriting itself mid-play, or instruments playing notes from unknown songs.

The annual Festivals of Light and Song, once joyful celebrations, now feature unexpected and eerie elements. Lanterns drift into the sky, only to multiply into hundreds and disappear into strange constellations, while songs performed at the festival seem to summon forgotten memories from the audience. Some visitors leave enchanted and inspired, while others feel unsettled by the glimpses of otherworldly forces lingering just beneath the surface of each celebration.

A History Written in Chaos

The Dogun District has always been a place of transformation, having grown from a small fishing village into a vibrant commercial hub. Immigrants from eastern lands first settled here, drawn by abundant fish and fertile soil, and built a community that quickly evolved into a center of trade and culture. However, as the Weirding spread, the district began to change in ways no one could have anticipated.

Shops that have stood for decades now report phantom customers—strange figures flickering at the edge of sight who leave coins of unfamiliar origin. Theater performances spontaneously alter, and restaurants sometimes serve dishes not listed on the menu, with flavors described as both delightful and impossible. The district's long history of resilience serves it well, as residents continue to adapt to the new normal, finding opportunity even in uncertainty.

Navigating the District's Anomalies

While the Dogun District remains a thriving part of Eveltoft, venturing through it now carries new risks and surprises. Streets have been known to shift subtly, creating new paths and shortcuts—or leading travelers in endless loops. Visitors are advised to stick to well-marked routes or hire guides familiar with the district's peculiarities. Those who wander too far may encounter unexpected phenomena, such as conversations overheard from other times or markets that appear, conduct business, and disappear within hours.

Despite the oddities, locals maintain a sense of humor and resilience. The phrase "Dogun will provide" has become a common saying, reflecting both the district's unpredictability and its potential for surprising good fortune. Many residents even welcome the Weirding as a creative muse, believing it adds an element of magic to everyday life. However, the district guard remains vigilant, ensuring that the strange occurrences remain manageable and public safety is not compromised.

A New Era of Innovation and Wonder

Though the Dogun District has been reshaped by the Weirding, it thrives on change. The district's merchants, artists, and performers continue to celebrate the unexpected, making Dogun a place where commerce and creativity intertwine in ways no one could have imagined. Visitors come not only to shop and dine but also to experience the magic of unpredictability, knowing that anything can happen.

Despite the uncertainty, Dogun remains a place where opportunity thrives, and both locals and travelers find wonder in the chaos. The Weirding may have altered the district, but it has also enriched its character, transforming Dogun into a dynamic, ever-evolving experience. Here, on the streets where markets flow like rivers and art takes on a life of its own, the people of Dogun continue to embrace the strange—finding beauty, humor, and profit in the unpredictable tides of this new era.

Fishmark District

Fiskmark District

Center for waterfront fun, delicious seafood, and strange maritime encounters.

The Fiskmark District is renowned for its bustling fish markets, seafood restaurants, and thriving waterfront. Yet, like the rest of Ryndor, Fiskmark has not escaped the influence of the Weirding, which has subtly—and sometimes overtly—warped its coastal charms. While seagulls still call and the salty sea breeze fills the air, visitors to Fiskmark may notice unusual phenomena lurking just beneath the surface of everyday life.

Fish Markets and Strange Catches

The markets of Fiskmark continue to thrive, with vendors offering the freshest seafood in Eveltoft—but not without a few strange surprises. The nearby waters, once predictable and generous, have become less reliable under the influence of the Weirding. Fishermen occasionally return with odd catches—fish that glow faintly in the moonlight, crabs with extra limbs, or eels that seem to sing eerie melodies when submerged in water. Some of these strange creatures fetch high prices from curious buyers, though most fishermen remain wary of selling them, fearing the curses or unpredictable effects they may carry.

Many visitors are drawn to the allure of the Weirding, hoping to catch glimpses of strange aquatic life or try delicacies said to be infused with residual magic from the astral plane. Some dishes have even become local legends—from soups that give fleeting visions of the future to oysters that leave a strange hum in the ears of those who eat them. While these peculiarities attract the curious, local fishermen take precautions when casting their nets, as too many encounters with Weirded creatures have left vessels lost to time disturbances or tangled in phantom storms.

Seafood Delights and Bewildering Tastes

Fiskmark's seafood restaurants remain second to none, offering both classic dishes and new creations influenced by the Weirding. Culinary experiments are on the rise, with chefs using unpredictable ingredients brought back from fishing expeditions. Visitors rave about "mirrored cod," a fish with a reflective sheen that seems to display shifting images of the past as it cooks, and "ember prawns," which crackle like embers in the mouth, warming the eater from the inside out.

Not all Weirded dishes are for the faint-hearted. Some visitors have reported temporary transformations—skin taking on a sea-green hue or hair shifting to translucent strands—after indulging in certain seafood platters. Others claim that some meals whisper strange thoughts, leaving them wondering whether the food was truly meant for mortal consumption. Adventurous diners flock to Fiskmark for the thrill of tasting the unknown, though many establishments still offer traditional fare for those who prefer to avoid the Weirding's influence.

Waterfront Leisure and the Sport of Utfordring

The waterfront of Fiskmark is more lively than ever, with visitors booking fishing trips, dolphin rides, and harbor tours. Yet, even leisurely strolls along the docks come with a touch of the unexpected—boats sometimes appear in the harbor without ever setting sail, and phantom figures are spotted boarding vessels only to vanish upon closer inspection. Some adventurous souls rent boats in search of underwater Weirding zones, hoping to catch rare aquatic phenomena or witness undersea rifts firsthand.

Living and Adapting in Fiskmark

Fiskmark remains a tight-knit community, though life here now requires a measure of caution and adaptation. Locals have grown used to the peculiarities of the Weirding, treating them with a mix of humor and wariness. Children playing on the docks sometimes chase echoes of themselves—faint, translucent versions of moments yet to happen. Street performers integrate the strange occurrences into their routines, making illusions out of real-time distortions, much to the amusement of tourists and townsfolk alike.

Though merchants and fishermen continue to do business as usual, many now carry charms and wards against Weirded disruptions. Superstitions have taken hold—sailors refuse to cast off on certain tides known to overlap with Weird zones, and taverns display weirdstones to ward off malignant influences. Despite these challenges, the people of Fiskmark remain resilient and resourceful, viewing the Weirding as just another obstacle to overcome.

A Place of Thrills, Trade, and Transformation

The Fiskmark District stands at the crossroads of tradition and transformation, its vibrant markets and thriving waterfront infused with the unpredictable magic of the Weirding. Here, every meal might offer more than just nourishment, every fishing expedition a glimpse into another reality, and every sport a test not just of skill, but of adaptability. Visitors come not only for the seafood and sport but for the thrill of the unexpected, knowing that Fiskmark offers experiences found nowhere else in Eveltoft.

For those who embrace the chaos and wonder of the Weirding, Fiskmark promises not just entertainment and excitement—but a journey into the strange and unknown. Whether you seek delicious food, thrilling competitions, or a brush with the bizarre, Fiskmark remains the place where commerce and magic meet, inviting all who visit to taste the unpredictable tides of this ever-changing world.

Heibury District

Heibury District

Day passes or proper identification required for entry

Named for the legendary shield wall that once stood in defense of the city, the Heibury District remains the military heart of Eveltoft. Its barracks, armories, and training grounds continue to forge the fiercest warriors in Ryndor, but in the age of the Weirding, Heibury has become more than just a bastion of tradition. Unpredictable phenomena now weave their way through even the most rigid of drills, leaving warriors to grapple not only with blades and bows but also with the chaos of altered reality.

Training Amid the Unpredictable

Heibury's warriors train relentlessly, though their routines now include unexpected disruptions caused by the Weirding. Training grounds shift underfoot, forcing recruits to adapt mid-spar. Mock battles are interrupted by strange flickers of time, leaving participants suddenly on opposite sides of the fight or resetting moments they can't quite remember. Some soldiers develop strange abilities—their reflexes heightened as if guided by unseen hands or weapons glowing faintly with residual energy—but these gifts come at a cost. Too much exposure to the Weirding has led to soldiers reporting fractured memories or a sense of being watched by things unseen.

Adventurers and visitors are still welcome to participate in mock battles, but they must be prepared for anomalies in the sparring arena. Illusions of past battles sometimes manifest without warning, and those unprepared for these phantom encounters may find themselves fighting alongside forgotten warriors—or against the shadows of their own memories.

Craftsmanship in an Altered Reality

The blacksmiths and weapon makers of Heibury continue their tradition of exquisite craftsmanship, though now even their forges are touched by the Weirding. Blades hum with strange vibrations, shields seem to repel more than physical attacks, and some armor responds to invisible forces—becoming lighter or heavier at unpredictable intervals. Visitors to the workshops may witness artisans using new techniques, channeling unstable magic into steel in ways previously thought impossible. However, these innovations come with risks—some weapons develop minds of their own, refusing to be wielded by those they deem unworthy.

Despite the strangeness, Heibury's weapon makers remain proud of their craft. They continue to offer tours and demonstrations, and visitors can commission custom-made swords or enchanted armor—though the final product might bear unforeseen quirks. Some Weirded weapons have become prized in underground markets, though official military orders forbid their use in service, wary of what unintended effects they might unleash on the battlefield.

Mercenary Work and Bounty Boards

Heibury remains a gathering place for adventurers, mercenaries, and bounty hunters, though the jobs posted now carry far stranger risks. Bounty boards offer contracts to track creatures touched by the Weirding, escort caravans through areas affected by time distortions, or close small rifts that open unpredictably along trade routes. Mercenaries must navigate not just enemies but shifting landscapes, as paths change mid-mission and beasts from other planes slip through cracks in reality.

Some adventurers have begun to specialize in Weirding-related jobs, developing expertise in recognizing anomalies and handling creatures altered by the strange magic. These specialists are in high demand but tread carefully—too many encounters with the Weirding have left veterans haunted by dreams that feel too real or fragmented memories of places they've never been.

Living in Heibury: Adaptation and Vigilance

Life in Heibury now demands discipline and adaptability, as even the most familiar routines are affected by unpredictable phenomena. Guards and soldiers patrol not only for criminal activity but also to contain sudden Weirded occurrences. Strange rifts sometimes open in alleyways, and phantom warriors from long-forgotten wars wander the streets before dissolving into mist. The people of Heibury are accustomed to unexpected challenges, meeting each new disruption with the same determination and precision that defines their military heritage.

The great shield wall, though long fallen, remains a symbol of resilience—a reminder that Heibury's people stand firm, no matter how strange or unstable the world becomes.

A District of Tradition and Transformation

The Heibury District remains a vital part of Eveltoft, even as it navigates the challenges of the Weirding's encroachment. Its warriors train harder, its blacksmiths innovate boldly, and its adventurers embrace the unpredictable. Heibury's identity—rooted in tradition, honor, and strength—has become more complex, as its people learn to adapt to a world in flux without losing sight of who they are.

In Heibury, the past and present merge, and discipline meets uncertainty. The district is a place where swords and shields still matter, but where sharp minds and quick reflexes are just as essential. For those who call Heibury home, the Weirding is not something to fear—it is just one more challenge to conquer, another battlefield on which to prove their worth.

Gullborg District

Gullborg District

Timeless Splendor Suspended

Once the pinnacle of luxury and opulence, Gullborg District now lies frozen in time, held captive by the enigmatic forces of the Weirding. From the outside, the district appears untouched by the years that have passed since the slow-time anomaly first took hold. Visitors observe only days-old celebrations and freshly stocked storefronts, but for those outside, years have passed without seeing their loved ones, or conducting trade inside the district.

A Glimpse Through the Curtain of Time

To the outside world, Gullborg looks unchanged. The grand markets bustle as they did on the day the slow-time anomaly emerged, musicians play in courtyards, and half-finished meals linger on tables. The illusion is almost comforting.

Few dare to enter Gullborg unless absolutely necessary. Merchants waiting for goods trapped in the district have given up hope of retrieving them, and many who tried to venture in for rescue missions are now trapped within, just as bound by the slow-time anomaly as the original residents. Only two individuals have ever escaped the district since the Weirding began—both returned disoriented, younger than their children trapped outside the zone, and haunted by the sense that they left something behind.

An Uncertain Future

City officials and the Crystal Scholars have yet to find a way to neutralize the slow-time anomaly that holds Gullborg in its grasp. Efforts to seal the rift or recalibrate the temporal flow have failed, and some fear that the anomaly may spread, consuming more of Eveltoft if left unchecked. Yet the allure of Gullborg's wealth keeps some desperately seeking solutions. If the anomaly can be controlled, they reason, the mastery of time itself could become the city's greatest asset.

But for now, the district remains both a treasure trove and a trap, suspended on the edge of reality, where luxury lasts forever—and so does regret. Those trapped inside may live out their days in comfort and splendor, but whether they will ever escape to enjoy it in the outside world remains unknown. The question on everyone's mind is: if time moves differently inside Gullborg, what becomes of the soul when the years no longer align?

Kieferden District

Kieferden District

A Tranquil Oasis Beneath the Veil of the Weirding

Once known as a peaceful retreat within the bustling city of Eveltoft, Kieferden District has been touched by the unpredictable influence of the Weirding. Though its lush greenery, spas, and Ferden Pool still draw visitors, the serenity that once defined the district now carries a subtle sense of unease. Strange phenomena ripple beneath the surface, and those who visit leave wondering if the tranquility they experienced was real—or a carefully woven illusion.

The Strange Stillness of Ferden Pool

At the heart of Kieferden lies the Ferden Pool, a natural hot spring once famous for its healing properties. Now, under the effects of the Weirding, the pool exhibits strange behaviors. Water levels shift inexplicably, with the pool draining one moment and brimming over the next. Mineral deposits shift in color, sometimes glowing faintly at night, and ripples appear on the surface even without wind—as though something unseen stirs from beneath. Some visitors claim the water warps time, making a few moments of immersion feel like entire days. Others whisper that entering the pool can alter memories, leaving bathers unsure whether their experiences are real or imagined.

Legends about the Sev'rinn sorcerer who first summoned the pool have resurfaced, with new rumors suggesting that the spring's magic has been awakened by the Weirding. Some believe the Ferden Pool is now a conduit between worlds, drawing energy from Nebernoria. Strangely, objects left by the water's edge sometimes vanish overnight, only to reappear in entirely different parts of Eveltoft—or not at all.

Spas and Wellness Centers: Healing or Hallucination?

Kieferden's spas and wellness centers continue to offer treatments and therapies, but those who seek relaxation within the district now risk strange side effects. Massages may trigger fleeting visions, as if memories from other lives bleed through. Aromatherapy sessions leave participants feeling oddly disconnected from time, while herbal teas brewed with local plants produce dreams that feel startlingly real—and sometimes impossible to forget.

A growing number of apothecaries in the district have begun experimenting with Weirded herbs, despite warnings from the Crystal Scholars. Some concoctions are said to enhance magical abilities, while others temporarily grant strange insights, though at the cost of disorientation or paranoia. The herb shops in Kieferden now attract adventurers and scholars eager to unlock the secrets of these new remedies, though the risks are ever-present.

Art, Music, and Performance in a Warped Reality

The district's arts and culture scene has also been transformed by the Weirding. Musicians claim that their instruments play notes unbidden, as though guided by invisible hands, and painters report visions that compel them to create works far beyond their original intent. Art galleries have begun showcasing pieces that change subtly over time—portraits blink or shift expression, and landscapes display different seasons depending on the time of day. Performers speak of strange occurrences during shows, such as props moving of their own accord or audiences seeming to forget entire performances midway through.

Ferden's theaters and music venues now host performances influenced by the district's weirdness, featuring experimental compositions and illusion-based spectacles. Some acts claim to invoke Nebernorian energies, creating mesmerizing experiences that blur the line between reality and fantasy. Audiences leave entranced but unsettled, uncertain whether they witnessed art or some fragment of another realm.

Rumors of Secret Societies and Cults

The dark rumors surrounding Ferden Pool have only deepened under the influence of the Weirding. Some say that the pool serves as a meeting place for secret societies seeking to harness the rift's energy. Others believe that a cult devoted to Nebernoria has emerged, conducting rituals by moonlight in the district's hidden groves. The Crystal Scholars have launched investigations into these rumors, but no conclusive evidence has been found—though the disappearance of several investigators has fueled suspicions that something is lurking beneath Kieferden's surface.

A Haven, with a Touch of Madness

Despite the unease the Weirding brings, Kieferden remains a place of beauty and wonder. Visitors still come to immerse themselves in the Ferden Pool, seek rare herbs, or indulge in the district's renowned spas and performances. Yet beneath the peaceful veneer, the influence of the Weirding pulses—subtle, persistent, and impossible to ignore. Every breeze through the district's trees seems to whisper secrets, and every ripple in the pool suggests that another world lies just out of reach.

Those who visit return changed, whether they realize it or not. Some leave with newfound clarity or strange insights, while others report a lingering sense of disconnection from time and place. What Kieferden offers in peace, it takes in certainty—for in this oasis touched by the Weirding, nothing is ever truly what it seems.

Dollow Canyon

Dollow Canyon

A Verdant Weird

Dollow Canyon, stretching between Mt. Bannockwyrm and Benard Peak, is an anomaly in Ryndor's otherwise cool and rugged landscape. While much of the surrounding region is defined by volcanic rock and harsh winds, Dollow Canyon bursts with jungle overgrowth, a lush and humid paradise where nature thrives unchecked. Warm air currents funnel into the canyon, making it one of the warmest places in Ryndor, where tropical flora and fauna have flourished unnaturally. Yet, beneath its vibrant beauty, the effects of the Weirding make this jungle treacherous—a place where life grows too fast, and the rules of nature twist unpredictably.

A Jungle That Defies Time and Logic

The jungle of Dollow Canyon is a living maze. Paths open one day and close the next under walls of vines and flowering canopies. Plants bloom, wither, and regrow within hours, creating a surreal rhythm of life and decay that challenges both memory and navigation. Some adventurers speak of entire groves of trees that migrate through the canyon, forcing travelers to rely on instinct and luck to find their way. Fruit trees bear strange, luminous fruit that grants unusual effects—visions of the future or bursts of strength—but sometimes exact a hidden toll in return, such as sudden fatigue or strange compulsions.

The Weirding makes the jungle even more dangerous. Some plants exhibit behaviors that mimic animals, while animals take on plant-like qualities, such as vines that lash out like serpents or beetles that root themselves into the soil like weeds. Time passes strangely here—what seems like a day within the canyon might only be moments outside, and some explorers return with memories of events they cannot explain, as if they experienced multiple timelines within a single journey.

The Creatures of Dollow Canyon

The creatures of Dollow Canyon are equally unusual, their biology warped by the Weirding. Gigantic predatory plants, such as flytraps the size of carriages, lurk in the undergrowth, their glowing tendrils exuding a hypnotic scent. Insect swarms shimmer with iridescent wings, shifting colors as they move, and serpents with bioluminescent scales weave through the jungle's branches, casting eerie patterns of light in the twilight beneath the canopy.

Perhaps the most dangerous inhabitants are the jungle trolls, twisted by time and magic. These creatures are cunning and fast, capable of blending into the environment with chameleon-like skin. Some trolls seem to exist outside the normal flow of time, blinking in and out of reality or appearing in multiple places at once. The Weirding has made these trolls nearly impossible to predict or fight—they seem to learn from future encounters, making them deadlier with each confrontation.

A Tropical Oasis for the Bold and the Foolish

Despite its dangers, Dollow Canyon attracts both scholars and treasure hunters eager to unlock the secrets of the jungle. Rare herbs and plants with powerful medicinal properties grow only here, including flowers that glow under moonlight and mosses that heal wounds instantly—though some claim these plants come at a hidden cost. Potions brewed from Dollow's plants are said to grant immense power or strange dreams, but prolonged use can blur the lines between reality and hallucination, leaving the drinker untethered from time.

Travelers seeking hidden ruins within the canyon hope to discover remnants of ancient civilizations or artifacts affected by the Weirding. However, finding such treasures is no small feat—many who enter the canyon become hopelessly lost within the shifting jungle or fall prey to the predatory life forms that thrive within it.

An Ever-Changing Labyrinth

The environment within Dollow Canyon shifts so frequently that it is almost impossible to map. New rivers appear overnight, flowing through the jungle only to dry up the next morning. Waterfalls cascade from seemingly nowhere, only to vanish as quickly as they arrive. The heat and humidity are oppressive, causing illusions and mirages that blend with the Weirding's natural effects.

Those who enter the canyon must rely on their instincts, for even the most detailed maps become obsolete within hours. Some say the jungle is alive, responding to the thoughts and emotions of those within it. Paths seem to open for those with pure intentions, while others close off abruptly for travelers whose hearts are weighed down by greed or fear.

A Risk for the Brave, a Trap for the Unwary

The lure of wealth and mystery draws many into Dollow Canyon, but only a few emerge unscathed. Some return with treasures or strange plants in hand, but others come back with fractured minds, speaking of visions they saw in the jungle's depths—visions of futures that may never come to pass, or encounters with creatures that seemed to know them before they had even met.

Despite the dangers, the canyon has become a pilgrimage site for Sev'rinn mystics and adventurers, who believe that surviving its challenges brings enlightenment and strength. However, many are lost within the jungle, their stories swallowed by the ever-changing wilderness. Jungle paths close behind them, and the forest forgets.

Dollow Canyon stands as a paradox—a place of life, yet filled with death; a realm of beauty, but home to terror. Those who dare to venture into its depths must tread carefully, for here, even the plants have memories, and time itself seems to play tricks on the mind. Will you find the treasures you seek—or become just another lost soul among the verdant maze, swallowed by the tangled grip of the Weirding?

Hurstwold Forest

Hurstwold Forest

Deep, dark mysteries in the trees

Hurstwold Forest has long been a place of legend, but the Weirding has twisted its mysteries into something far more perilous. The forest itself seems only half tethered to the material world. Trails appear and disappear at will, leading travelers in circles for days or dropping them into places they never intended to visit. What was once a beautiful and mystical woodland has become a place where the boundary between reality and dream flickers and folds—and where those without pure intentions risk more than just getting lost.

Dense trees loom overhead, their trunks seemingly breathing with strange patterns of light and shadow, as if absorbing the Weirding's influence. The air is heavy with a cool, shifting mist that dampens both sound and senses, making it impossible to know how far one has traveled—or whether they are still within the same moment they began. Moss glows faintly underfoot, shifting colors in response to emotions or thoughts, as though it is alive and aware. This eerie, sentient landscape confounds even experienced travelers.

A Home for Warped Beings

The magical creatures that once called Hurstwold home—faeries, sprites, and unicorns—have been irrevocably altered by the Weirding. Some have become fragmented versions of themselves, flickering in and out of existence as though trapped between realities. Others are more powerful and unpredictable, their behavior now far more dangerous. Faeries weave illusions of past lives or alternate futures, confusing travelers into making deals that bind their souls. Sprites appear as doppelgängers of lost loved ones, luring wanderers deeper into the forest's ever-changing heart.

More troubling are the new creatures birthed from the Weirding's touch—twisted forms of animals and beings that defy classification. Some are harmless and strange, like a fox with eyes that glow like stars. Others are incredibly dangerous, such as shadow-stags whose antlers seem to absorb light and energy, draining the life force of those who stand too close.

The Heart of Hurstwold: A Grove Lost to Time

At the heart of the forest lies the legendary sorcerer's grove, though the Weirding has altered its reality beyond recognition. The sorcerer's grove, once rumored to hold a portal to any place in the world, is now said to be a doorway to nowhere and everywhere—a place where those who step through disappear from all known realms, their fates left to drift across the multiverse.

Those few who claim to have reached the grove tell incoherent tales of swirling stars and endless voids—or offer visions of strange, otherworldly cities built upon impossible architecture. It is rumored that only those with pure intentions may still reach the grove's center, but the definition of "pure" has become dangerously fluid under the Weirding's influence.

Traps and Curses of the Forest

The Weirding has twisted more than the creatures of Hurstwold; it has also altered the very terrain. Paths once navigable by locals now shift without warning, dropping travelers into deadly pitfalls or endless mazes of thorny brambles. Some areas are rumored to loop time infinitely, leaving wanderers to experience the same moments over and over—until they slowly lose their grip on reality.

Those who stray too far from the known trails may encounter malevolent spirits warped by the forest's strange energies. These specters are believed to be the remnants of lost souls who fell victim to the Weirding's pull, forever trapped in fractured moments of fear and regret. Locals warn that to meet your reflection in the forest is a terrible omen, as it means that the forest intends to keep you—and leave your true self behind.

Living in Harmony with Chaos

Despite its dangers, some creatures and beings have adapted to the new reality of Hurstwold Forest. Witches, druids, and renegade Sev'rinns have taken refuge deep within its heart, learning to bend the Weirding's effects to their will. These practitioners of ancient magic embrace the chaotic nature of the forest, wielding the strange currents of time and space like tools. They live in hidden enclaves, their communities cloaked in illusions that only the truly initiated can see through.

Even so, life here is precarious. The witches speak in riddles, claiming that the forest whispers truths from futures that may never come. Some villagers on the outskirts of the Hurstwold believe these witches can grant visions of other timelines—but at a steep price: memories, years of life, or even names.

Locals who know the forest well have adapted simple customs to avoid its worst traps. They carry charms carved from Hurstwold wood and leave offerings to the forest spirits to ensure safe passage. These offerings often consist of candles or personal tokens, placed at the entrances of the forest. Without such rituals, even a short journey can result in a lifetime of wandering through warped realities.

Innerstifla Sound

Innerstifla Sound

A Rift-Touched Passage

The Innerstifla Sound, separating Leighmore from the ancient Hurstwold Forest and the coastal town of Norwycke, has become a place of unpredictable beauty and danger, deeply influenced by the Weirding. Named for the ice that once reliably coated its surface in winter, the sound now shifts unpredictably between frozen stillness and turbulent chaos, as though time itself ebbs and flows through its waters. According to ancient legend, the great frost giant Hrimnir carved the sound with his enchanted staff, smashing the ice to open a deep channel. Now, the strange forces unleashed by the Rift to Nebernoria have warped both the waters and the creatures that inhabit them, creating a place where reality is never quite stable.

Waters in Flux

The waters of Innerstifla pulse with unpredictable energies—at times calm and crystalline, reflecting the heavens above, and at others boiling with strange currents that seem to defy the natural laws. Ice forms overnight even in summer, only to crack and melt within moments. Sailors navigating the sound describe encounters with phantom storms that appear and vanish within minutes, leaving behind strange debris—barnacled artifacts and bones not of this world. Occasionally, entire stretches of the sound become mirrors of other places or timelines, revealing alternate versions of the ships that sail them, or showing glimpses of Nebernoria's shimmering astral waters.

The Creatures of Innerstifla Sound

The magical creatures that once called Innerstifla Sound home have been profoundly altered by the Weirding.

- Mermaids, once beautiful but perilous guardians of the sound, have become twisted by the strange energies. Their songs now echo across time, creating eerie harmonies that seem to linger in the minds of those who hear them, even after they leave the water. Those who listen too long may find themselves unable to distinguish between dreams and reality. Some say that these mermaids phase between worlds, slipping between Ryndor and Nebernoria, and that their voices are fragments of lost souls drifting across dimensions.

- The sea serpents, already feared by sailors, have become even more monstrous. Their scales shimmer unnaturally, shifting in hue with the light and leaking strange phosphorescence into the water. Some serpents appear impossibly large, as though their bodies stretch into another plane, their eyes flickering with the eerie glow of astral fire. Sailors tell tales of serpents emerging from nowhere, vanishing in the blink of an eye, and entire ships swallowed by the strange folds of reality that surround these beasts.

Navigating the Sound: Peril and Profit

Though the Innerstifla Sound is fraught with danger, it remains an essential trade route between Leighmore, Norwycke, and the Hurstwold. Brave merchants and sailors still traverse the sound, though few return without tales of the strange happenings they encountered along the way. Some traders have reported cargoes inexplicably altered mid-journey—barrels of wine turned to saltwater, or fish caught in the net transformed into stone. Others swear that the journey takes longer than it should, as if time stretches and warps within the sound's waters.

The most daring captains seek to profit from the Weirding's influence. Certain weirded artifacts and rare astral materials have surfaced from the depths, valuable to collectors and scholars alike. Yet every expedition into the sound carries immense risk—some sailors return marked by the experience, claiming to have seen themselves from another timeline, or insisting that something unseen followed them back to shore.

A Rift Below the Waters

The Crystal Scholars suspect that the sound is connected to a submerged rift, a secondary faultline leading to Nebernoria. Faint currents of astral magic weave through the water, disrupting the natural rhythms of the sea and creating anomalies that even the most experienced navigators struggle to explain. Scholars have detected pockets of slowed time beneath the surface, where objects and creatures become frozen for years or even decades before re-emerging. Some abandoned ships drift silently beneath the water, their crews long gone, preserved as ghostly remnants of an earlier age.

Strangely, the currents beneath the sound seem to respond to emotion. Those who sail the waters in fear often encounter hallucinations or temporal echoes, as though the sound draws from their anxieties to manifest illusory threats. Others report feelings of profound déjà vu, as if they've sailed these waters in another life—or are doomed to sail them again.

A Place Caught Between Worlds

The Innerstifla Sound is more than just a dangerous stretch of water—it is a liminal space, balanced between Ryndor and the astral plane. Every journey across it carries the risk of crossing into another reality, or of becoming lost in time's unpredictable currents. Those who return from the sound speak of impossible things—familiar landmarks that shift, strange lights that flicker beneath the water, and the eerie feeling of being watched by something just out of sight.

Despite the risks, the people of Leighmore and Norwycke depend on the sound for their livelihood, and the Fishermen's Guild continues to organize regular crossings. The Keepers of the Rift maintain a watchful presence along the shores, fearing that the influence of the Rift could spread further if the sound is not kept under control. Yet even they admit that the waters are unpredictable, and that one day, something too large to contain may rise from its depths.

Sailing the Shifting Waters

The Innerstifla Sound has become a place where fortunes are won and lost in the blink of an eye. Sailors, smugglers, and adventurers alike are drawn to its eerie beauty, hoping to glimpse something extraordinary beneath its shifting surface. But every voyage comes with the knowledge that the sea does not forgive easily, and that those who dare to sail these strange waters may find themselves caught between realities, with no way home.

For those brave enough to attempt the crossing, the sound offers both peril and possibility, a glimpse into a world where nothing is certain, and even the stars may not shine as they should.

Inverlinn Coast

Inverlinn Coast

The Volcanic Lands

The southeastern coast of Ryndor, known as Inverlinn, is a desolate volcanic expanse, a place where fire and earth meet in perpetual unrest. Its name, drawn from the ancient Nordica words for fire and mountain, perfectly reflects the volatile landscape—a region shaped by eruptions, lava flows, and seismic upheaval. Long ago, the Nordica people believed that powerful spirits and magical forces dwelled within these mountains, and rituals to appease and harness their power were performed under the shadow of the Great Volcano. Today, with the spread of the Weirding, the ancient energies of Inverlinn have become even more unstable, transforming the region into a place of chaotic magic and unpredictable danger.

A Land of Fire, Magic, and Mutation

Inverlinn remains largely abandoned, with only a few small, reclusive communities scattered across the volcanic coast. Those who live here are hardy survivalists, using ancestral magic and newfound Weirded abilities to endure the harsh environment. Magma drakes, fire elementals, and lava spiders still stalk the craggy terrain, but these creatures, too, have changed—fused with strange energies from the Weirding. Some lava spiders spin webs that shimmer like starlight, while fire elementals pulse erratically, their flames flickering with colors unseen in ordinary fire. Locals report sightings of phantom beasts—creatures that shift in and out of existence, leaving no trace but scorched footprints and an uneasy hum in the air.

Even the volcanoes themselves seem affected. Some erupt with no warning, while others that have been dormant for centuries now rumble with strange patterns, as if alive and listening. Occasionally, magma rivers twist into impossible shapes, flowing uphill or spiraling into glowing whirlpools. The air above the volcanic craters sometimes shimmers with an ethereal mirage, reflecting visions of other realms or alternate futures, though it's impossible to say if these sights are real or illusions born of the Weirding.

The Magic of the Inverlinn People

The people of Inverlinn possess unique magical abilities, shaped both by their ancient traditions and the strange energies of the Weirding. It is said that those born under the shadow of the volcanoes inherit elemental magic—their blood infused with the power of flame and stone. However, these abilities come with a heavy cost, as overuse of magic in Inverlinn can awaken dormant anomalies in the landscape, causing time distortions, cracks in reality, or wild magical storms. Local practitioners have learned to balance their magic carefully, using just enough to survive without triggering disastrous changes.

Rumors spread of individuals who have embraced the Weirding, gaining powerful but unstable abilities. These mages, known as Ashborn, are said to channel both fire and astral energy, becoming living conduits for the chaotic magic of the land. However, they are also feared, for their power often draws dangerous anomalies—rifts that open suddenly, unleashing creatures from other realms or causing matter to dissolve and reform unpredictably.

A Haven for Scholars and Adventurers

Despite the risks and strangeness, the Inverlinn Coast draws adventurers and scholars from across Ryndor, eager to unlock its mysteries. The Great Volcano, long thought to contain ancient relics or forgotten knowledge, has become a subject of fascination, though few who enter its depths return unchanged. Those who survive speak of chambers filled with glowing obsidian, fire spirits whispering ancient prophecies, and pools of magma that reflect not the present but distant futures or alternate possibilities.

Even the ruins of ancient Nordica temples, scattered across the coast, offer only cryptic clues. Some temples appear to shift locations, defying all attempts to map them, while others reveal new chambers overnight, as if awakened by unseen forces. Scholars seeking to study these ruins must navigate both the volatile terrain and the unpredictable magic, all while avoiding the creatures that lurk in the shadows, their forms twisted by the Weirding.

Life in Inverlinn: Thriving on the Edge of Chaos

For those who choose to live in Inverlinn, life is harsh, but resilience is woven into their very bones. The small communities scattered across the volcanic coast rely on agriculture, hunting, and magic to survive, though even the crops behave strangely. Some plants grow hot to the touch, while others emit faint glows under moonlight, and a few release clouds of ash-like spores that cause vivid, prophetic dreams. Rituals to maintain harmony with the land are performed regularly, though even these customs have begun to evolve under the Weirding's influence.

Visitors are welcome in these isolated communities, but they are expected to respect the old ways and honor the spirits of the land. Outsiders often struggle to understand the delicate balance that the locals maintain—one misstep could disrupt the tenuous harmony, inviting disaster or awakening dormant threats. The people of Inverlinn may be few in number, but they possess a deep understanding of the forces around them, both magical and mundane. Community bonds are strong, and each member plays a vital role in ensuring the survival of their neighbors.

A Land of Mystery, Danger, and Opportunity

Inverlinn remains a place of great mystery and wonder, but now it is also a land of unpredictable chaos. Adventurers seeking glory are drawn to the coast, hoping to discover lost relics or new forms of magic, but many return only with fragmented memories—or not at all. Scholars come hoping to unravel the secrets of the Weirding, only to find that the land resists easy understanding. The magma flows shift, the creatures mutate, and the Great Volcano rumbles with ancient intent, as if it holds knowledge not meant to be uncovered.

For those bold enough to venture into Inverlinn, each step is a gamble. The Weirding makes no promises, and what one finds beneath the ashen skies and glowing rivers may be treasure or torment. Yet, despite the dangers, the allure of discovery persists, and those who understand the balance between risk and reward may find their greatest opportunities waiting within the fire and shadow of Inverlinn.

Isles of Holmea

Holmea

The Misty Island

Off the northeastern coast of Ryndor, beneath the shadow of the Bannockwyrm Mountains, lies the floating island of Holmea, now suspended within a powerful Weird Zone. Once a formidable stronghold of the Sev'rinn Rebellion, Holmea now drifts through swirling mist above violent fjords. This strange elevation, a side effect of the Weirding, has made the island even more remote and enigmatic.

The Sev'rinn Council, formed after their victory over the Ullac Regime, governs magic from Holmea, where they established a prestigious school of magic to teach young practitioners to harness their abilities responsibly. The island's natural defenses, bolstered by enchantments and now affected by unstable magical currents, have made it an ideal sanctuary for magical beings and creatures, offering them protection from persecution.

Holmea also harbors a vast preserve for magical creatures, managed by skilled Sev'rinns to ensure their survival amidst the Weirding's chaotic influence. Strange mutations among the fauna are closely monitored, as the creatures respond to the island's shifting energy.

Holmea has become more than just a school or preserve—it is a symbol of resilience and hope for those marginalized for their magical gifts. Though floating adrift in an ever-changing Weird Zone, its community thrives, offering refuge and inspiration to those seeking a place where magic is not just accepted, but celebrated. The island's influence radiates across Ryndor, and its people remain among the most respected and powerful figures in the realm.

Life on Holmea

Life on the floating island of Holmea is as mystical as it is unpredictable, with its elevation suspended by the chaotic forces of a powerful Weird Zone. The constant mist that shrouds the island deepens the sense of mystery, shifting with astral energies that make navigation treacherous. Holmea's natural defenses—enhanced by enchantments and strange anomalies—protect its thriving community of magical beings and practitioners, creating a sanctuary where magic is not only celebrated but protected from persecution.

The Sev'rinn Council governs magic across Ryndor from Holmea, maintaining balance despite the unpredictable effects of the Weirding. Their prestigious school of magic, one of the finest in the region, draws young magical beings eager to master their abilities. Yet, even the students and Sev'rinn masters are not immune to the Weirding's influence—spells behave unpredictably, and the school must constantly adapt its teaching to account for the strange new properties of Primordial Resonance.

The island's preserve for magical creatures, managed by skilled Sev'rinns, has also been affected by the Weirding. Creatures mutate, gaining new abilities or exhibiting odd behavior patterns, and habitats twist into unfamiliar shapes. The Sev'rinn caretakers work tirelessly to understand and mitigate these changes, ensuring the preserve remains a safe haven amid growing instability.

Life on Holmea requires self-sufficiency and cooperation. The isolation caused by its floating elevation forces its inhabitants to rely on one another, with resources carefully managed to ensure prosperity. Navigating the mist and shifting landscapes poses challenges for visitors and residents alike—many have become lost in its depths, their paths twisted by astral interference.

Despite these difficulties, Holmea remains a beacon of hope, knowledge, and sanctuary, where magic is protected and practiced freely. It stands as a symbol of resilience, proving that even in an era reshaped by the Weirding, unity, adaptability, and wisdom can forge a path forward.

Lake Polshaw

Lake Polshaw

A Cradle of the Weirding

Lake Polshaw is a place where the influence of The Weirding is palpable, warping reality and bending nature in unsettling ways. The lake's dark waters are said to reach unfathomable depths, appearing as a reflection of nothingness, as if the world itself stops beneath its surface. Strange currents swirl unpredictably, and at times, entire sections of the lake shift position, leaving familiar landmarks displaced. The eerie silence is only interrupted by the discordant cries of twisted ravens with too many wings and serpent-like creatures that coil beneath the water, their forms flickering between states of being.

The forest surrounding Lake Polshaw has mutated, its gnarled trees growing inward toward the water, as if drawn by an unseen force. The trees appear to pulse slowly, as if breathing, and their branches shift unnaturally, creating shadowy figures that seem to stalk the lake's edge. Strange, glowing fungi sprout intermittently, releasing spores that float in still air, unmoved by the wind, leaving travelers with an uneasy sense that they are being watched by something unseen.

The House on Stilts: An Echo of the Past

Suspended precariously over the shifting waters, an abandoned house still clings to its rotting stilts—a relic caught between worlds. Locals claim that the house is not always present, appearing and disappearing unpredictably. Sometimes, the structure looks old and crumbling, other times, it is eerily pristine, as though untouched by time. Time moves differently within the house, with visitors reporting hours passing inside while only moments elapse outside, or vice versa.

Legends say that the family who once lived there was lost to an unknown curse brought on by the lake's strange energies. Their fate has become intertwined with temporal echoes that loop endlessly, replaying fragments of memories through ghostly apparitions that drift between moments. Those who enter the house might encounter the family in various states of distress, as if pulled from different points in their final moments, trapped in an eternal loop of despair.

Only a few have ventured inside and returned, each claiming to have seen impossible reflections of their own future or past selves, or to have had conversations with versions of people they have yet to meet. One survivor reported that every door in the house opens into a different reality, some serene, others terrifying. The walls seem to whisper riddles, as if the house itself is alive, eager to trap intruders in its tangled web of timelines.

The Deep League's Ambitions and the Weirded Waters

Despite its dangers, the League of the Deep has expressed interest in using Lake Polshaw for the next Utfordring Championship, intrigued by the unique challenge posed by the lake's unpredictable reality shifts. However, the proposal has sparked controversy, as few believe it is possible to hold a fair competition in waters tainted by the Weirding. Competitors could become trapped in time loops or fall through rifts into other realms.

The League has begun experimental training sessions in the lake, though reports from participating athletes are troubling—some claim to have swum for hours, only to resurface back at the starting point as if they had never moved. Others report strange encounters beneath the surface: glowing, fish-like creatures that vanish the moment they are touched, and visions of alternate selves urging them to abandon the race.

A handful of athletes have refused to participate, citing nightmarish hallucinations and missing memories that plague them after leaving the water. Yet, the allure of such a unique playing field persists, and whispers among the elite teams suggest that the League may already be developing weirded tactics to navigate the lake's strange currents and temporal distortions.

Mt. Bannockwyrm

Mt. Bannockwyrm

The Dragon Mount

Mt. Bannockwyrm stands as one of the most imposing and enigmatic landmarks on Ryndor's northeastern coast, towering near the floating island of Holmea. Since the onset of the Weirding, the mountain's mysteries have deepened, and reality itself seems to warp along its jagged cliffs and hidden trails. Time, space, and even magic twist in unpredictable ways around the mountain, creating an atmosphere both exhilarating and perilous.

The summit of Mt. Bannockwyrm, once thought to be unreachable, now shimmers with strange currents of energy, making traditional navigation impossible. Paths may lead travelers to places they never intended to go, while others seem to vanish altogether, only to reappear days or even weeks later. The Weirding's influence manifests in fluctuating weather patterns, where sudden thunderstorms or bursts of freezing wind can occur without warning.

A Haven of Weirded Creatures

Mt. Bannockwyrm is home to many rare and mystical creatures—some native to the mountain, others transformed by the Weirding's unpredictable magic. Among them is the Thunderbird, a storm-beast whose feathers crackle with lightning, now appearing only when the Weirding currents align. Alpine Unicorns, once a rare sight, now seem to exist in multiple places simultaneously—glitches in reality that make it impossible to know whether you're encountering the same unicorn or several versions of the same creature.

Deeper within the mountain, the fire elementals have become unstable, their flames flickering between realities. It is said that a single elemental can appear in two places at once, making them impossible to trap or fight. Wind Witches, believed to control the region's weather, have become something more—they now tap directly into the Weirding itself, their powers unpredictable and terrifying. It is whispered that the strongest among them no longer age, existing out of time and seeing visions of possible futures.

The Labyrinth of Shifting Caverns

Mt. Bannockwyrm has always been a place of labyrinthine caves, where smugglers and treasure hunters sought refuge. However, the Weirding has transformed these passages into ever-changing corridors, where even seasoned explorers can lose their way. Maps drawn within the caves are useless—passages twist back upon themselves or lead to places that should not exist. Some areas appear frozen in time, while others are ravaged by bursts of time dilation, where days pass in moments or moments stretch into years.

Rumors persist that somewhere within the caves lies an ancient treasure hoard, guarded not only by traps but by the unpredictable tides of the Weirding. Some adventurers claim to have glimpsed phantom artifacts—objects that flicker in and out of existence—suggesting that the treasures of the mountain may exist simultaneously across multiple dimensions.

The Hidden Forces Within

Despite the Weirding's chaos, some factions actively seek to harness the mountain's untapped power. The Wind Witches, long believed to guard the summit, are said to have formed pacts with astral entities beyond Nebernoria, using the Weirding to strengthen their control over the elements. Nullification wards—powered by enchanted springs within the caves—attempt to contain the worst of the Weirding's effects, though cracks in the wards suggest the containment is slowly failing.

Treasure hunters and smugglers still risk the caves, despite the warnings. Many seek mythical relics from the early Sev'rinn rituals, believing they hold the key to stabilizing the Weirding. Others seek forgotten weapons, hoping to use the mountain's unstable magic to gain an advantage in Ryndor's dangerous political landscape. Some whisper that the Custodians of Prosperity, housed in nearby Ban Mynydd, have already begun secret experiments with artifacts retrieved from Bannockwyrm's depths.

The Mountain of Possibilities—and Peril

Mt. Bannockwyrm is a place where reality bends to the will of magic, memory, and myth. Every step on its winding paths is a step into the unknown—a place where treasure and ruin wait in equal measure. The descendants of Runa's children believe the mountain is testing them, and those who survive its trials emerge changed, with glimpses of futures yet to come.

Yet, for all its beauty and majesty, Mt. Bannockwyrm remains treacherous. Those who climb its heights must be prepared to face twisting time, fractured realities, and creatures born of magic and madness. For every adventurer who returns with tales of strange wonders, another vanishes into the mountain's depths, forgotten by the world outside.

To climb Mt. Bannockwyrm is to embrace the Weirding fully, accepting the uncertainty it brings. Whether brave, foolish, or desperate, all who seek the mountain's secrets must confront a simple truth: nothing on Mt. Bannockwyrm stays the same for long.

Nebernoria

Nebernoria

Nebernoria, a strange and volatile realm within the astral plane, has always been home to bizarre landscapes and mysterious beings. However, the advent of The Weirding has disrupted both realms, creating mutual chaos that flows between Ryndor and Nebernoria. As energy spills through the Rift, Ryndor's reality fractures—but the effects do not stop there. The Weirding has taken root within Nebernoria, altering its creatures and shifting its landscapes even further.

Astral Constructs, already unstable beings formed from raw astral energy, now mutate unpredictably, changing shape and nature in ways even the native entities cannot anticipate. Some creatures exhibit behaviors never seen before—hulking beasts turn ephemeral without warning, while formerly insubstantial beings become aggressive, solid forms. Whole regions dissolve and reconstitute in entirely new shapes, defying reason with each passing moment.

Crossing between Ryndor and Nebernoria has become more treacherous than ever. The Keepers of the Rift, charged with safeguarding the portal, must now contend with the unpredictable surges of The Weirding flowing both ways. As travelers step through the Rift, they find themselves in constantly shifting environments where even time cannot be trusted. Explorers returning from Nebernoria carry not just artifacts but strange astral afflictions—some come back physically intact but mentally broken, while others seem out of sync with reality, slipping between timelines.

The connection between the two realms has become a source of both power and instability. While artifacts pulled from Nebernoria offer unimaginable potential, each object risks spreading Weirding phenomena further into Ryndor. Adventurers seeking to unlock the Rift's secrets must navigate both the chaos of Nebernoria and the growing instability of their own world, knowing that the Weirding flows in both directions—and neither realm will ever be the same.

Norwycke

Norwycke

Gateway to the Sea

The remote coastal town of Norwycke stands on the threshold between the known and the unknowable, where the mystical Hurstwold Forest and the relentless sea meet. Steep cliffs surround the small bay, and the rolling hills beyond hint at ancient power. While life in Norwycke once followed predictable rhythms of fishing and agriculture, The Weirding has rewritten the rules of existence here. Now, strange events bleed through the cracks between worlds, complicating the town's already rugged lifestyle.

Though hardy and self-sufficient, the people of Norwycke now live on edge, navigating temporal surges, strange visions, and twisted realities that arise without warning. Visitors brave enough to explore the Hurstwold are warned of paths that shift overnight and trails that loop back on themselves—or worse, disappear entirely, trapping wanderers between moments.

Norwycke remains a paradox: a quiet town filled with echoes of things that never were, where fishermen haul in impossible catches and farmers' crops bloom out of season or rot overnight. Even so, the community has learned to adapt to the unpredictable nature of their home, welcoming those who respect their way of life, but cautioning everyone that not all who come to Norwycke ever leave.

A Haunted History and Evolving Realities

Norwycke's long history, steeped in the legends of Viking settlers and enchanted forests, now bends under the weight of the Weirding's influence. Locals say the town no longer sits fully within one reality—it drifts at the edges of time and space, occasionally pulling in fragments from distant worlds. The once-thriving market of Norwycke has transformed into a surreal bazaar where objects age and un-age within moments, and mysterious trinkets appear for sale without any memory of who placed them there.

The Hurstwold Forest, long believed to be home to fairies, elves, and ancient magical creatures, has changed dramatically. Trails flicker in and out of existence, and travelers report seeing themselves walking ahead or behind on parallel paths. Pockets of altered time flow within the forest, causing some adventurers to emerge years later while believing only hours have passed. Others never return at all, or reappear strangely changed—speaking languages no one recognizes or carrying artifacts from places that exist only in dreams.

Life in a Weirded Town

Daily life in Norwycke has become a delicate dance between the familiar and the unpredictable. The fishermen cast their nets knowing that some catches glow with unnatural light, and crops are planted with the understanding that the seasons may not follow. Temporal shifts ripple through the town, causing some days to stretch endlessly while others vanish before noon. The locals have become accustomed to lost time and strange visions—figures moving in reflections, or phantom animals stalking the forests around them.

The townspeople are fiercely protective of each other, even more so in the face of the Weirding's strange influence. Community events have evolved into rituals of grounding and protection, meant to anchor Norwycke to reality for as long as possible. Town meetings serve not only to govern, but also to share sightings of strange anomalies and offer support to those who have returned from time slips or strange encounters in the forest.

Despite its unsettling environment, Norwycke's spirit endures. Fishing and farming remain at the heart of daily life, though the harvests are often unpredictable, and the waters of the bay hold secrets from other realities. For relaxation, the townspeople gather at the local café, but many conversations drift to discussions of strange phenomena and rumors of new Weirding pockets forming in the Hurstwold. Outdoor activities such as hiking and fishing remain popular, though they carry a higher risk—venturing too deep into the woods or bay can mean slipping into an alternate reality, or worse, never returning.

Navigating the Unknown

While some visitors come to Norwycke in search of the beauty of the Hurstwold Forest or the serenity of the coast, others arrive seeking answers about the Weirding's influence. Researchers, adventurers, and mystics are drawn to the town, hoping to uncover its mysteries or harness the strange powers at work. The locals, however, warn these outsiders: the Weirding does not follow mortal logic, and curiosity often leads to ruin.

The town is also a hub for those fleeing other Weirded zones, offering temporary refuge for those looking to escape the chaos elsewhere in Ryndor. But even here, safety is relative—many who stay too long in Norwycke find it increasingly difficult to leave. Some claim the town itself has grown sentient, deciding who may come and go, trapping unlucky souls in its ever-shifting reality. Only a few have managed to escape once the Weirding takes hold, though none emerge unchanged.

Surreymouth

Surreymouth

The Current of the Isle

Surreymouth, once a thriving trade hub on the southern coast of Ryndor, now stands transformed by The Weirding's unpredictable influence. Though it remains the center of commerce on the isle, the city's fortunes rise and fall with the strange phenomena that emanate from both The Rift to Nebernoria and the sea. Water travel is still preferred over land routes, as the terrain warps unpredictably, storms appear without warning, and strange beings emerge from places where they should not exist.

The Surreymouth Port Authority continues to oversee trade, managing both legal commerce and fending off rampant black-market operations. However, The Weirding has only emboldened criminal enterprises, as weirded artifacts, enchanted cargo, and illicit goods slip between realms, complicating oversight. The city's underworld has flourished, with organized crime families adapting to the new reality, taking advantage of the strange twists of fate that now define Surreymouth's chaotic landscape.

Life in a Weirded Port

The harbor is a kaleidoscope of strange vessels and altered ships—some ordinary, others twisted by the Rift's influence. Fishermen, merchants, and sailors navigate waters that shift currents unnaturally, as entire ships have been known to disappear for days and return as if no time had passed at all. Sailors whisper of strange lights beneath the waves, silent voices that beckon from the deep, and phantom ships appearing alongside real ones—ghostly copies that vanish before the break of dawn. Even seasoned traders must prepare for the unexpected, as cargoes occasionally warp or change mid-journey, arriving as completely different goods than when they were loaded.

Despite the unpredictability, the bustling markets of Surreymouth remain vibrant, offering goods both mundane and bizarre. Traders from across Ryndor still flock to Surreymouth's bustling quayside, where fishmongers sell strange, glowing catches from the deep, and street vendors peddle weirded trinkets rumored to carry curses or blessings. Merchants tread carefully, knowing that even innocuous purchases might contain hidden magic or strange energies that follow buyers home.

The city's famous inns and taverns, once hubs of camaraderie, have also become places of suspicion and intrigue. Whispers fill the air, and patrons exchange tales of near misses with temporal echoes or eerie visions experienced at sea. Some travelers report having spoken to future or past versions of themselves, leaving them deeply unsettled. Bartering with time-warped merchants has become a new risk, as deals made today might not come to fruition for years—or hours.

Port Authority in the Shadow of The Weirding

The Surreymouth Port Authority, once a beacon of structure and control, struggles to maintain its grip on the city's chaotic waters. Their attempts to monitor trade have become fraught with strange incidents, as entire manifests rewrite themselves during inspections, and customs officials are forced to navigate goods that sometimes vanish only to reappear days later in another district. Their Coast Guard patrols often encounter phantom ships or vessels caught in time loops, making piracy more difficult to track.

Smuggling rings have adapted, using the cover of strange weather patterns and disruptions caused by the Weirding to move illicit goods, including weirded artifacts that are highly sought after in black markets across Ryndor. Corruption has grown rampant, with some customs officers rumored to be trading in time-warped goods themselves, profiting from the Rift's influence. The organized crime families of Surreymouth thrive under this new uncertainty, offering protection and predictability to those willing to pay.

The Deep League: Utfordring's New Frontier

The Deep League of Surreymouth, once renowned for its mastery of the aquatic sport Utfordring, now finds itself in uncharted waters. Weirded phenomena affect the competitions, as currents within the underwater arenas shift unpredictably, and merfolk athletes experience temporal anomalies mid-game. Players sometimes emerge from a match only to discover that days have passed above the surface. Though the league has officially banned weirded artifacts and influence from the sport, rumors persist of athletes dabbling with strange charms to gain an edge.

Spectators continue to flock to the matches, captivated by the unpredictability of the Weirding's influence. Each game is a gamble—not just for the players but also for the fans, who might leave the arena to find entire seasons have passed while they watched a single match. Some players, frustrated by the unpredictable disruptions, have called for the Deep League to officially incorporate weirded elements into the sport, believing that the chaotic nature of the Weirding represents the future of Utfordring.

A City Suspended Between Realities

Surreymouth's identity is now tied to the unpredictable pulse of the Rift and the sea. Life in the city is defined by risk and reward—those who can navigate the twists of fate stand to gain great wealth, but every venture carries the threat of being caught in a loop or lost to the shifting tides of reality.

The port, the markets, and even the criminal underworld have all been shaped by the Weirding, forcing the people of Surreymouth to adapt or perish. Time flows strangely here, creating opportunities for the bold and leaving the unprepared stranded. Fortune smiles briefly, and disaster strikes without warning, as the Rift and the sea dance together in an unpredictable ballet of chaos.

Yet, through it all, the people of Surreymouth endure, drawn by the thrill of the unknown and the promise of prosperity. For every trader that vanishes beneath the waves, another arrives to take their place. In Surreymouth, the line between success and ruin is as thin as a whisper—and every venture is a bet against the capricious nature of the Weirding itself.

Wenport

Wenport

The Seabreeze Harbor

The town of Wenport, perched along the rugged coastlines of Ryndor, is best known for its fishing, shipping, and maritime charm. But in recent years, as the influence of The Weirding spreads across the land, even this picturesque harbor town has begun to experience strange phenomena. Wenport's small fleet of fishing boats still ventures into the nearby seas, but the waters have grown increasingly unpredictable. Fishermen speak in hushed tones of shifting currents, glowing creatures, and fish that seem to shimmer with unnatural colors—and not all catches are safe to eat anymore. Some say the sea remembers things it shouldn't, and that what comes from the depths now carries hints of ancient forces best left undisturbed.

At the heart of Wenport lies its picturesque harbor, where brightly colored fishing boats bob on gentle waves, though some mornings, the water moves without wind, as if pulled by unseen hands. The old lighthouse, long a beacon of safety for sailors, now emits an occasional pulse of light that some claim reveals glimpses of distant shores—or forgotten memories. Locals whisper that ships sometimes arrive with no sign of their crews, the decks covered in salt-encrusted barnacles, though the journey had only been a few days. Despite these unsettling events, the rhythm of life in Wenport persists, the town adapting to the strangeness around it with the same resilience and humor that has kept it afloat through storms and misfortune.

A Changing Port and New Tides

Wenport's small port and warehouses remain essential hubs for shipping goods between coastal towns, though trade routes have grown more erratic. Goods arrive in unexpected quantities or disappear mid-journey, only to reappear days later—damp and untouched. Some merchants swear their cargo was tampered with by ghostly hands during transport, and odd trinkets—barnacle-covered coins, bits of driftwood carved with incomprehensible symbols—sometimes find their way into shipments. A few traders have begun avoiding Wenport altogether, worried that whatever touches the port is marked by the Weirding.

Still, the fishing industry clings to tradition, and the local market bustles with activity. Fishermen proudly sell their catches, though some now wear protective charms—fishhooks twisted into spirals, believed to ward off the sea's influence. Travelers from neighboring towns and wandering merchants still pass through, and Wenport benefits from taxes and fees, though there is a growing unease about what the tides might carry next.

Even Wenport's small tourist trade has taken on a new edge. Visitors arrive drawn not only by the town's charm but by rumors of strange happenings—they hope to witness the strange lights of the lighthouse or catch sight of odd creatures lurking beneath the water's surface. The local artisans, though wary, now offer curious trinkets inspired by the Weirding—pieces of driftwood shaped like ancient sea gods, bottles filled with glowing sand, or paintings that shift slightly when no one is watching.

Life in Wenport: Resilience Against the Unknown

Life in Wenport remains tight-knit, though the strangeness of the Weirding presses at the edges of daily life. The townsfolk remain welcoming and warm, carrying on their maritime traditions with pride, but the laughter at the local tavern is now accompanied by furtive glances at the door. Fishing is still a way of life, but some fishermen have begun marking their boats with runes, believing it keeps them safe from whatever moves in the water now.

The annual Seabreeze Festival, once a simple celebration of the sea's bounty, has taken on new meaning. Some say it appeases whatever strange forces stir in the water, though the festival remains joyful—fishing competitions, boat races, and seafood tastings still draw crowds from far and wide. A new event has even emerged: The Lantern Drift, where townspeople release glowing lanterns into the harbor, hoping their lights will guide lost sailors or appease restless spirits.

The maritime museum now hosts strange artifacts found along the shore—driftwood with unfamiliar carvings, pieces of barnacle-crusted jewelry, and scraps of sailcloth from ships that never docked. Visitors to the town's art gallery find that some paintings seem to move subtly, shifting as though alive, their colors echoing the strange lights beneath the waves. Life in Wenport remains simple yet uneasy, with the townspeople determined to weather the changes—just as they've weathered every storm before.

The Harbor on the Edge of the Unseen

While the people of Wenport continue their work, not everything is as it seems. Ships sail into port carrying cargo from places no sailor remembers visiting, and some fishing nets return empty, filled only with odd pieces of kelp that seem to whisper when the wind blows through them. The lighthouse keeper, an elderly man who has tended the light for decades, swears that something watches the town from the waves—though whether it is protector or predator remains unclear.

The Weirding's influence lingers just beneath the surface—in the water, the waves, and the wind that blows through the cliffs. Some say the sea itself has become a conduit for the Weirding, a reflection of unseen realms and forgotten stories. And yet, the people of Wenport endure, welcoming travelers with hearty meals and open arms, knowing that change is inevitable but determined to face it together. Here on the coast, where sea and strangeness meet, the people of Wenport stand ready to ride the tides of the unknown, just as they have always done.

Wulfricton

Wulfricton

The Traveller's Rest

The last stop before ascending the hilltops to Eveltoft, Wulfricton lies nestled within a valley surrounded by rolling hills and dense, whispering forests. Though the town has stood for generations, The Weirding's influence now flickers at its edges, casting a shadow over its peaceful reputation. Named after Wulfric, the legendary warrior who defended the town from invaders long ago, Wulfric's Trading Post is still the heart of the town, bustling with merchants, travelers, and craftsmen. However, strange artifacts and odd trinkets—subtly affected by the Weirding—now circulate through the market, tempting buyers with unpredictable potential.

The market hums with the familiar sound of bargaining and laughter, yet an undercurrent of unease lingers in the air. Merchants murmur tales of shifting trade routes—paths that move or vanish overnight, leading traders hopelessly astray. Some swear that coins sometimes turn to dust or change into odd currencies after being exchanged, leaving both buyers and sellers questioning what is real. Despite the creeping strangeness, the people of Wulfricton are resilient, refusing to allow the unpredictable world to disrupt their long-held traditions.

A Town in Transition

Wulfricton's central square remains the town's focal point, where seasonal festivals and celebrations continue as they always have. In the spring, ribbons and flowers still adorn the streets to mark the renewal of life, but weird blooms—glowing petals or plants that change color—have begun appearing among the usual decorations. During the harvest season, the marketplace fills with bounties from the land, but some crops behave strangely, sprouting far beyond their season or growing with unnatural vigor. Farmers have reported wheat fields that seem to sing with ethereal voices under moonlight, and harvesters have begun to wear protective charms to avoid attracting unwanted attention from the Weird.

Craftsmen in the town continue to specialize in woodworking, metalworking, and leatherworking, though their materials are not always what they seem. Wood from nearby forests sometimes refuses to be carved, shifting its shape mid-project, and metal ingots hum with strange resonance, requiring artisans to develop new techniques to manage them. Despite these challenges, Wulfricton's craftsmen have embraced creativity and adaptability, making the town renowned for unique and finely crafted goods—some of which carry subtle magical effects, even when unintended.

Life in Wulfricton: Enduring the Unknown

Though Wulfricton's taverns and inns still serve hearty meals—stews, roasts, and fresh bread baked with local ingredients—rumors of strange visitors traveling through the hills have made their way into nightly conversations. Some travelers report time shifts, arriving in town only to realize that days, or even weeks, have passed without them noticing. Others claim to have seen ghostly figures—perhaps echoes of past festivals or ancient travelers lost to time—lingering at the town's borders, just beyond the firelight.

The people of Wulfricton have learned to live alongside these oddities, adopting protective practices passed down through generations. Charms and wards hang over doorways to guard homes against wandering spirits, and locals carry small stones from the nearby streams, believing them to offer protection from the Weirding's effects. Life in Wulfricton remains simple and grounded, though even the oldest families, whose roots run deep in the valley's soil, acknowledge that the land is not the same.

Community in the Shadow of Change

Despite the unpredictable world beyond their borders, the people of Wulfricton maintain a strong sense of tradition and community. Families continue to share stories passed down from generation to generation, though these tales have begun to twist and evolve, reflecting the changing nature of the world. Long-time residents warn travelers to stay vigilant, advising them to follow only familiar paths and avoid wandering alone at dusk, when the boundaries between the real and the strange feel thinnest.

The spirit of resilience that has always defined Wulfricton endures. The townspeople take pride in their ability to adapt, meeting the challenges of the Weirding with ingenuity and determination. They welcome travelers with the same warmth and hospitality that has always defined the town, though a watchful eye follows every stranger. Beneath the surface of laughter and merriment, there is an unspoken understanding that change is inevitable—and that the quiet hills and forests surrounding Wulfricton hold secrets waiting to awaken.

In Wulfricton, life continues much as it always has—though now, every step forward feels like balancing on the edge of the unknown.

Wyrmbost

Wyrmbost

Home of the Dragon Farms

Wyrmbost has always been a modest city compared to the bustling centers of Eveltoft and Surreymouth, but its role within Ryndor is indispensable. Nestled at the fringes of the Weirding's growing influence, Wyrmbost is both shielded and touched by the strange energies creeping across the land. It has existed under Eveltoft's protection since the days of Destin, thriving as the breeding ground for beasts and magical creatures. Yet now, with the emergence of the Weirding, unpredictable anomalies have begun to affect the animals, dragons, and crops that define life here.

Wyrmbost serves as the caretaker of native crops—one of the few places where agriculture remains somewhat stable in Ryndor. However, the land is restless. Crops sometimes shift color mid-season, growing with unsettling speed or twisting into unfamiliar forms. Farmers tread cautiously, unsure whether their harvest will yield bountiful food or strange, unrecognizable plants. Despite these oddities, the town's focus remains on its Dragon Farms, where miniature hybrid Fire Wyrms—favorites for labor and protection in the mines of Ban Mynydd—are bred. Yet even the dragons are not immune to the Weirding. Hatchlings have been known to flicker between shapes, some breathing fire that burns cold, while others develop second pairs of wings that disappear at dusk.

Breeders from Norwycke and Leighmore still arrive to retrieve bear cubs and thick-haired horses, but they come with superstition and hesitation, wary of what might have changed since their last visit. Some animals bred in Wyrmbost now display unsettling behaviors, such as staring into space for hours or emitting sounds that seem to echo from another place entirely. Visitors leave with their purchases but often return whispering rumors that their beasts now dream strange dreams or vanish briefly, only to reappear hours later without explanation.

The Dragon Farms

The Dragon Farms of Wyrmbost remain the town's pride and joy, raising dragons for companionship, protection, and work. The people of Wyrmbost have always held a deep reverence for these creatures, viewing them not only as tools but as sacred partners in their daily lives. However, the Weirding has complicated this long-standing relationship. Some dragons raised in Wyrmbost now absorb residual Weirding energy, giving them unpredictable abilities. Hatchlings born under strange stars have been known to vanish and reappear miles away, and others have shown signs of sentience far beyond their years.

The people of Wyrmbost remain determined to care for their dragons, learning new ways to manage their strange quirks. Some breeders now train their dragons to respond to the changes in their nature, developing innovative techniques to harness the unpredictability rather than fear it. A few dragons, touched by the Weirding, seem to be able to navigate strange anomalies—walking through warped spaces or temporarily resisting the pull of time distortions. Though these abilities are not fully understood, the dragons are more than willing companions in the town's efforts to thrive in uncertain times.

Life in Wyrmbost: Adapting to the Weirding

Daily life in Wyrmbost revolves around the Dragon Farms and seasonal agriculture, though neither is as straightforward as it once was. Many families raise personal dragons as companions and guardians, though some now display unsettling behaviors—their eyes glowing faintly at night, or their fire leaving runes scorched into the earth. These quirks are met with stoic acceptance, with the people of Wyrmbost saying,

"Even the land must learn to dream differently now."

Farmers continue to grow wheat, barley, and root vegetables, though they must monitor their fields closely. Some crops sing strange lullabies under moonlight, while others seem to resist being harvested—binding themselves to the soil as if unwilling to leave. Harvesters wear charms and perform rituals to avoid upsetting whatever forces now touch their land. In the face of these challenges, Wyrmbost's people remain close-knit and grounded, finding strength in their traditions and relationships with the land and their beasts.

Wyrmbost's artisan community also endures, crafting handmade goods from leather, fur, and wool—materials that have, on occasion, taken on odd properties. Some items seem to shift subtly in shape or texture when left unattended, while others hum with a low vibration, as if touched by an unseen force. These goods, despite their oddities, remain highly valued in the markets of the four sister cities. Travelers passing through Wyrmbost often stop to buy charms or enchanted accessories, hoping they will offer protection from the Weirding's influence.

Tradition and Resilience

Wyrmbost may not be as wealthy or influential as Eveltoft or Ban Mynydd, but it thrives on its own terms. The main square, dominated by a statue of Destin, stands as a reminder of the town's proud history and enduring spirit. An ancient stone bridge, still in use today, serves as both a landmark and symbol of Wyrmbost's ability to weather the changes brought by the Weirding. The people of Wyrmbost believe deeply in the bond between themselves and their dragons, knowing that no matter how strange the world becomes, they can adapt together.

Visitors to Wyrmbost are always welcome, but they are expected to respect the town's customs and acknowledge the partnership between beast and person that defines life here. Travelers who underestimate the dragons or treat them merely as tools soon find themselves unwelcome. The people of Wyrmbost are fiercely protective of their way of life and have little patience for those who refuse to adapt to the new reality.

A Future Forged in Strangeness

While the Weirding presents new challenges, it also offers unexpected opportunities. Some breeders have begun experimenting with Weirded dragons, exploring their unique abilities and how they might benefit the people of Ryndor. A few visionaries in Wyrmbost believe the Weirding is not a curse, but a gift waiting to be understood. However, these experiments remain carefully managed, as the town recognizes that not every change should be embraced.

As the Weirding deepens its hold on Ryndor, Wyrmbost stands as a testament to resilience in the face of uncertainty. Whether through dragonfire, clever craftsmanship, or sheer determination, the people of Wyrmbost remain steadfast, ready to face the future no matter how strange it may become. In this evolving landscape, Wyrmbost will endure, knowing that even in the most unpredictable times, the bond between person and dragon remains unbreakable.

Unmapped Lands

The Unmapped Lands of Ryndor

Beyond the well-charted regions of Eveltoft, Ban Mynydd, and Holmea lies the unmapped expanse of Ryndor—places so remote, dangerous, or transformed by the Weirding that no mapmaker dares attempt to chart them. These lands are not just unexplored; they seem to resist exploration entirely. What one explorer encounters may never be seen by the next, as shifting landscapes and strange phenomena erase trails, twist memories, or change the very nature of the terrain.

Traveling the unmapped lands is a perilous endeavor, for here the Weirding is unchecked and unpredictable. Rifts to other realms open and close seemingly at random, temporal loops trap wanderers, and new ecosystems bloom overnight. Some of these regions appear placid and inviting, only to reveal themselves as illusory or treacherous, while others teem with creatures born of chaos and magic, remnants of the Rift to Nebernoria's expanding influence.

What Lies Beyond?

The Unmapped Lands provoke endless speculation. Some say these places are portals to forgotten civilizations, their knowledge locked away beneath ancient ruins. Others believe that entire cities have been swallowed by the Weirding and now exist only in fragmented moments, blinking in and out of reality. The strange rumors include:

- Floating forests, islands of tangled roots and canopy that drift lazily across the sky, untethered from the ground.
- Inverted cities—entire metropolises buried underground, only accessible when the Weirding turns reality inside-out.
- Endless rivers, flowing in spirals and loops, where time moves slower as the water rushes faster.
- Behemoths of unknown origin, creatures so large they appear as moving landscapes, slowly traveling across the horizon.

Lost Expeditions and Forgotten Discoveries

Many expeditions have attempted to traverse these lands, but few return. Those that do bring back fractured memories and strange artifacts, their accounts riddled with contradictions. An explorer might swear to have encountered a tower that rose from nowhere, only to discover upon revisiting the location that nothing remains but a pool of water. Some tales speak of vast underground caverns, brimming with ancient machines humming with arcane energy, or plants that whisper secrets to those who listen closely enough.

The Sev'rinn Council has long maintained that the unmapped regions hold forgotten ley lines, powerful sources of Primordial Resonance, but even their bravest members are reluctant to delve too far. For every new discovery, there are whispered warnings of phenomena too dangerous to confront—villages where the dead walk alongside the living or valleys where gravity runs sideways, leaving travelers stranded on invisible walls.

Legends of Lost Cities and Hidden Powers

Some claim that entire lost cities thrive within the unmapped expanse, their people surviving in realms fractured by the Weirding. Rumors abound of a city of glass that only appears under moonlight, and a fortress of stone that moves locations with every new moon. Mythical beasts—dragons, hydras, and creatures from nightmares—are said to roam these lands freely, warped by time and magic.

The Black Orchid, an elusive magical flower believed to grant unimaginable power, is said to grow in a hidden valley beyond the reach of any map. Others claim that a Nebernorian gate exists far within the unmapped regions, an unstable portal that pulls entire landscapes into the astral plane, forever lost to the material world.

Navigating the Unmapped

For those determined to brave these unpredictable regions, navigation is a maddening ordeal. Compasses spin wildly, paths shift from moment to moment, and landmarks seem to appear and vanish at will. Travelers must rely on instinct, luck, and perhaps even divinatory magic, for traditional tools and maps are utterly useless. Some guides swear by magically charged stones or enchanted objects, which they believe can sense areas of stability amidst the chaos.

Others place their trust in dreams and visions, believing that glimpses of the unmapped regions can be found within the subconscious. This practice is fraught with peril, however, as the Weirding seems to feed upon intention—the more you search for something specific, the less likely it is to be found.

Warnings from Those Who Returned

Those few who have survived journeys through the unmapped regions often emerge deeply changed. Some are aged beyond their years, while others return young and vibrant but plagued by visions of futures that never happened. Many claim to have lost parts of themselves—memories, emotions, or even their shadows—left behind in places where time and reality blurred beyond recognition.

The Sev'rinn mystics warn that the unmapped lands are not merely wilderness but places where the boundaries between worlds have unraveled, leaving all who enter vulnerable to the strange tides of other realms and fragmented timelines. Whether these are places where possibility reigns or where reality has come undone remains a mystery—one that only the most daring adventurers might solve, though at great cost.

Adventuring in the Unmapped Lands

For those brave enough to explore these regions, the rewards can be immense—but the risks are greater still. Magical artifacts of untold power, rare ingredients for the most potent potions, and lost knowledge from ancient civilizations are just some of the treasures rumored to lie hidden within the unmapped lands. Yet for every explorer who returns with riches, countless others vanish without a trace.

Will you uncover the truth behind the legends of the unmapped lands? Will you risk everything to find the lost cities and forgotten treasures? Or will you become another story told around the fire—a warning to those who dream of taming the unknown?

In the unmapped regions of Ryndor, nothing is certain. Reality shifts, paths dissolve, and time itself becomes an unreliable guide. Here, even the bravest adventurers are as likely to find madness as fortune. Will you risk stepping beyond the edges of the map? And if you do, will you return whole—or at all?

Actions
Dagger. Melee Weapon Attack: +4 to hit, reach 5 ft., one target.
Hit: 4 (1d4 + 2) piercing damage.

Personality and Motivation
Halric is a suspicious and streetwise townsman, navigating the gray areas of Norwycke's social circles. He's resourceful but not a fighter, relying on wit and stealth.

Halric discovered the Ullac connection when Feddel's shipments didn't align with the rising green fungus incidents, and he's been gathering clues ever since. Desperate to find allies, he assumes the worst about strangers—especially anyone connected to the salve supply—and only opens up if persuaded.

Halric is motivated by survival and exposing the suppliers before the fungus overtakes the town. He's not a hero but knows the streets well enough to assist the party.

The Reliquary

The world of Ryndor is home to an abundance of treasures, both common and wondrous, that adventurers can discover during their travels. Some of these treasures have been passed down through generations, while others were created by ancient civilizations that no longer exist. Whatever their origin, these treasures hold great power and value that can change the course of an adventurer's journey.

The treasures of Ryndor come in many forms - gold, gems, magical artifacts, and more. Some of them are simply objects of beauty, while others have practical uses or possess mystical properties. However, they all have one thing in common: they are highly sought after by adventurers, treasure hunters, and villains alike. This chapter will explore the many treasures that can be found in Ryndor, from the smallest trinkets to the most powerful artifacts, and provide insights into their histories and significance in the world of Ryndor.

Magic Items

The world of Ryndor is filled with magic, and many of its ancient civilizations have left behind powerful items that still hold mystical properties. These artifacts range from simple trinkets to legendary weapons, each with its own unique history and power. Adventurers who seek to uncover the secrets of Ryndor will find that magic items are essential tools in their journeys. They provide aid in battle, protection from harm, and even the ability to traverse great distances. However, these items are not easily found, and many are fiercely guarded by powerful creatures and ancient guardians.

Uncommon Items

These magical treasures are not as legendary as the artifacts of Ryndor, but they are still highly sought after by adventurers and collectors alike. These items possess unique properties and abilities that can give adventurers an edge in their journeys, or unlock new paths to power. From enchanted weapons to magical trinkets, each of these items has its own story and history, waiting to be discovered by those brave enough to seek them out. In this section, we will explore a few of the many uncommon magic items that can be found in the world of Ryndor.

Ichor of Runes

Uncommon Potion

This viscous, greenish liquid contains the essence of ancient runes, imbuing the drinker with a powerful connection to magic.

Drinking the Ichor of Runes grants the following benefits for one hour:

* The drinker has advantage on all Intelligence (Arcana) checks.

* The drinker can cast one 1st-level spell of their choice that they do not have prepared, using their spellcasting ability. Once this spell is cast, this feature can't be used again until the next dawn.

Additionally, when the effects of the potion end, the drinker must succeed on a DC 15 Constitution saving throw or suffer one level of exhaustion.

Spite Mantle

Uncommon item, requires attunement

The Spite Mantle is a cloak made of a black, rough fabric that seems to repel light. When worn, the user gains resistance to necrotic damage.

Additionally, once per short rest, the user can use the cloak to cast the spell Hex (save DC 14) on a creature they can see within 60 feet. The spell lasts for 1 hour or until the target drops to 0 hit points.

Finally, while attuned to the Spite Mantle, the user has disadvantage on all Wisdom (Insight) checks as the cloak seems to feed on negative emotions and thrives on causing strife.

Jar of Invocation

Uncommon magical item

This small glass jar is filled with a swirling mist that seems to glow with an inner light. When opened, the mist pours out and takes the form of a humanoid figure made of pure energy.

While the figure is present, it can be commanded to perform a single task or action, such as delivering a message or attacking an enemy. Once the task is completed, the figure dissipates and the mist returns to the jar.

The jar can be used once per day, and the figure has a duration of 1 hour or until the task is completed.

Properties:

* As an action, the jar can be opened to release the mist, which takes the form of a humanoid figure made of pure energy.

* The figure can be commanded to perform a single task or action.

* The figure has a duration of 1 hour or until the task is completed.

* The jar can be used once per day.

Weight: 1 lb.

Azure Urn

Uncommon Item

This small azure-colored urn is made of a rare crystal and is adorned with intricate silver engravings.

When the urn is filled with any type of liquid, the liquid will never spill, no matter how the urn is tilted or shaken, and the urn will always remain cool to the touch.

Once per day, the urn can be used to cast the spell Purify Food and Drink on up to one gallon of liquid inside.

Fruit of Nightmares

Uncommon item

The Fruit of Nightmares appears as an unassuming piece of fruit, resembling an apple or pear, but with a sickly grayish-purple hue.

\pagebreakNum

Once consumed, however, the fruit transforms into a writhing, tentacled creature, resembling something out of a Lovecraftian horror. This creature is loyal to its consumer and will follow their commands to the best of its ability.

While the creature is alive inside the body of the consumer, the consumer gains advantage on Intimidation checks. However, the creature has a limited lifespan and will eventually dissolve into a sticky, acidic residue, leaving behind only the pit of the fruit. The pit can be passed and then re-planted to produce more Fruit of Nightmares.

Neberbloom

Uncommon plant

This rare and valuable plant is known for its ability to absorb and store magical energy. When consumed or used in alchemical concoctions, it can enhance the potency of spells and imbue the user with magical power. However, due to the difficulty of extracting and handling it, neberbloom is a highly prized and expensive commodity.

Effects:

When consumed, the user gains advantage on their next spell attack or spell save DC.

When used in an alchemical concoction, the user can add an additional 1d4 to the spell's damage or healing.

Neberbloom can be used to craft potions of magic absorption, which grant temporary resistance to magic damage.

Drawbacks:

The extraction process is dangerous and requires specialized knowledge, with a risk of failing and losing the plant's magical properties.

Overuse can lead to magical instability and unpredictable results, including wild magic surges or spell failures.

Neberbloom is highly addictive, and prolonged use can lead to physical and mental deterioration.

Rare Items

The rare magic items of Ryndor are whispered about in hushed tones and legends of their power have spread far and wide. These are items of immense power, coveted by adventurers and rulers alike, and their histories are often shrouded in mystery and danger. Only the most courageous and cunning of adventurers can hope to obtain these treasures and unlock their full potential. From ancient artifacts to powerful relics, each of these rare items holds immense power and potential. In this section, we will delve into the world of rare magic items, and explore the stories and legends behind some of the most powerful treasures in all of Ryndor.

Tranquility Feather

Rare magical item, requires attunement

This feather is a calming and peaceful presence, seemingly imbued with the gentle breeze of the world. When held, the feather gives a feeling of serenity and tranquility to the user.

While attuned to the Tranquility Feather, the user gains the following benefits:

* The user gains advantage on Wisdom (Insight) checks.

* The user gains resistance to psychic damage.

* The user can cast the spell Calm Emotions (without expending a spell slot) once per long rest.

In addition, the Tranquility Feather has 3 charges. The user can spend 1 charge to cast the spell Sleep (without expending a spell slot) targeting a single creature. The spell has a range of 60 feet and does not require concentration. The spell does not affect creatures with an Intelligence of 4 or less, constructs, or undead. The Tranquility Feather regains all charges at dawn.

This rare magical item is often sought after by healers, diplomats, and anyone who seeks peace and serenity in their lives. It is said that the feather was once owned by a powerful druid who had the ability to calm even the wildest of beasts.

Insanity Mirror

Rare magical item, requires attunement

This small hand mirror has a silver frame and a polished obsidian surface. When you gaze into it, you see your own reflection but with subtle distortions and shadows that seem to flicker and twist unnaturally.

While attuned to the Insanity Mirror, you gain the following benefits:

Distorted Reflection When you take the Dodge action on your turn, you can choose to shift your reflection into an alternate dimension, gaining partial concealment until the start of your next turn. You have advantage on Dexterity (Stealth) checks and gain resistance to non-magical damage from ranged attacks.

Invisible Box

Very Rare, artifact

This small, unassuming wooden box is completely invisible, even to detect magic spells. It weighs 1 pound and measures 6 inches in length, 4 inches in width, and 2 inches in height. The Invisible Box has the following properties:

Invisibility. The Invisible Box is completely invisible and cannot be detected by any means, including detect magic and true sight.

Storage Space. Despite its small size, the Invisible Box can store up to 100 pounds of material, or up to 20 cubic feet of material.

Opening and Closing. To open or close the Invisible Box, the user must speak the command word "Aethis" in Dwarvish. Once the command word is spoken, the Invisible Box will become visible for 1 minute, allowing the user to open or close it. After 1 minute, it will become invisible again.

While the Invisible Box is a powerful item for storing and transporting valuable items, its invisibility also makes it easy to lose or forget. Additionally, it cannot be used to hide living creatures, as any creature inside the box will suffocate due to lack of air.

Nebernite

Wondrous item, rare

This rare, glowing blue mineral can only be found in the otherworldly realm of Nebernoria. Nebernite is highly sought after by mages and enchanters for its powerful magical properties. When properly attuned, it can enhance the abilities of magical items and imbue them with additional enchantments.

While holding or wearing a magical item that is not already attuned to Nebernite, you can spend 8 hours attuning it to this rare mineral. Once attuned, the magical item gains a +1 bonus to its magical properties. Additionally, you can expend a spell slot of 2nd level or higher to imbue the item with an additional enchantment of your choice from the following list:

\pagebreakNum

Elemental Fury The item deals an additional 1d6 damage of a chosen elemental type (acid, cold, fire, lightning, or thunder) on a hit.

Forceful Impact The item grants the wielder the ability to knock back an opponent they hit with it. The target must make a Strength saving throw (DC = 8 + your proficiency bonus + your spellcasting ability modifier) or be pushed back 10 feet.

Empowering Presence The item grants the wielder advantage on Charisma-based checks and saving throws.

Once you have expended a spell slot to imbue the item, you cannot do so again until the next dawn. Additionally, Nebernite attunement lasts for 30 days, after which it fades and the item loses the bonus and additional enchantment.

Legendary Items

The legendary magic items of Ryndor are the stuff of legends, whispered about in awe and wonder by adventurers and common folk alike. These are items of unparalleled power and enchantment, capable of feats beyond the imaginations of mortals. They are objects of great beauty, imbued with arcane energies that sing through their every fiber. Each wondrous item is unique and remarkable, bearing the stamp of the ancient wizards and artisans who created them. In this section, we will explore the world of wondrous magic items, and delve into the legends and stories behind these mystical treasures.

The Everlasting Quill

Legendary, artifact

The Everlasting Quill is an ancient artifact with a gold and silver feathered body and a nib made of a rare gemstone that constantly shimmers and changes color. The quill is imbued with powerful magic that allows its user to create and manipulate reality through the written word. Its ink never runs dry, and it is said that the quill has the power to write the destiny of those who wield it.

Reality Shaping The user can use the Everlasting Quill to write new realities into existence. This can include creating new creatures, objects, or even entire locations. The effects of the writing are immediate and permanent, but the user must have a clear idea of what they wish to create, as vague or incomplete ideas will not work.

Destiny Writing The quill has the power to write the destiny of a creature or object. When the user writes the destiny of a creature or object, it becomes a self-fulfilling prophecy, and the written destiny will come to pass. The user must be careful with this power, as the destiny they write may not always be what they intend.

Ink of Power The ink used by the Everlasting Quill is infused with powerful magic. The user can use the ink to cast spells, as long as they have the appropriate components and the spell is written down.

Limited Use The Everlasting Quill has limited charges, and once its charges are expended, it becomes a mundane quill until its charges are restored.

Cursed The Everlasting Quill is a powerful artifact, but it also comes with a terrible curse. The user of the quill is forever bound to it, and their destiny becomes entwined with that of the quill. The quill will always call to its user, and they will feel a constant urge to write with it. If the user ever loses the quill or tries to destroy it, they will suffer from terrible nightmares and visions until they are reunited with the quill. Additionally, the quill will corrupt the user over time, slowly turning them into a being of pure magic.

Soulstone of the Ancients

Legendary Item, requires attunement

This small, polished stone emits a soft glow and seems to pulse with an otherworldly energy. The Soulstone of the Ancients is said to contain the souls of ancient and powerful beings from a time long forgotten.

While attuned to the Soulstone of the Ancients, the user gains the following benefits:

* The user gains proficiency in Arcana and History if they don't already have it.

* The user can communicate telepathically with any creature within 60 feet of them, as long as the creature understands a language.

* The user can cast one 9th-level spell of their choice once per day. The spell must be a divination or enchantment spell and cannot be changed once chosen.

Additionally, the user can choose to release the souls within the Soulstone of the Ancients to perform a powerful magical effect. Doing so requires the user to spend an action and make a DC 25 Wisdom saving throw. On a success, the souls within the stone are released, causing the following effects:

* All creatures within 60 feet of the user must make a DC 25 Wisdom saving throw. On a failure, they are stunned for 1 minute.

* The user can cast one 9th-level spell of their choice as part of this action. The spell must be a divination or enchantment spell and cannot be changed once chosen.

* The user's maximum hit points are doubled for 1 hour.

The souls within the Soulstone of the Ancients take time to recharge after being released, and the user must wait 1 week before being able to use this effect again. If the user dies while attuned to the Soulstone of the Ancients, their soul is absorbed into the stone, and they cannot be resurrected by any means.

Weirded Objects

Echo Flask

A silver drinking flask that whispers back whatever was last said around it.

- Effect: When a creature speaks within 10 feet of the flask, it records their words and repeats them 1d6 minutes later in the same voice and tone.

- Quirk: It sometimes plays the whispers at unsettling times, like during stealth missions or negotiations.

- Rumor: It’s said some echo flasks record words from past owners, causing strange or cryptic messages to surface unexpectedly.

Lightless Lantern

A lantern that gives off complete darkness.

A black-iron lantern etched with spiraling, eye-like runes. When activated, the glass panes seem to fill with inky, fluid shadow rather than light.

- Effect: When lit, the lantern emits an aura of magical darkness in a 30-foot radius. This darkness overrides non-magical light and prevents darkvision from functioning within its area. Only effects such as see invisibility, truesight, or devil's sight allow vision through the lantern's veil.
- Quirk: The darkness subtly bends and flows around living creatures within it. Observers outside the radius see brief glimpses of strange silhouettes that shouldn't be there—shapes that don't match anyone inside.
- Complication: The lantern affects memory—creatures who remain in its darkness for more than 10 minutes must succeed on a DC 13 Wisdom saving throw or forget the last minute of conversation or movement made within the veil.

The Itchy Blanket

A perfectly ordinary wool blanket that causes a slight itching sensation, even when not in use.

- Effect: When carried, the owner occasionally feels phantom itches and has a compulsion to scratch. If used to sleep, the user gains no benefits from a short rest unless they succeed on a DC 10 Constitution saving throw.

- Quirk: Washing the blanket does not remove the effect, and it always smells faintly of wet wool.

- Weirding Twist: When someone else sleeps under the blanket within 10 feet of the owner, both individuals will share each other's dreams.

Endless Sock

A single, long sock that never seems to have a pair.

- Effect: When unfolded, it keeps extending until it becomes a 10-foot-long tube. It always returns to its original size after 24 hours.

- Quirk: If torn or cut, the sock repairs itself overnight, albeit slightly mismatched in color.

- Rumor: Some believe this sock can capture and imprison mischievous spirits by turning them inside out within the tube.

Stone of Forgetting

*A smooth river stone that causes momentary lapses in memory when held tightly.

- Effect: If a creature holds the stone for more than a minute, they forget the last 1d6 minutes unless they succeed on a DC 12 Intelligence saving throw.

- Quirk: It's often found in people's pockets, with no memory of how it got there.

- Weirding Twist: The stone sometimes whispers fragments of lost memories to its owner in moments of silence.

Weathered Map

A map that changes depending on the weather conditions.

- Effect: The locations depicted shift based on the current weather. For example, towns only appear when it's sunny, rivers move with rainfall, and roads vanish during storms.

- Quirk: In areas affected by The Weirding, the map often displays impossible or forgotten landmarks.

- Complication: Relying on this map for travel can be dangerous, as it may mislead travelers into nonexistent locations.

Compass of Reluctance

*A brass compass whose needle refuses to point north unless coerced.

- Effect: The needle can only be made to point north if the owner hums a song for at least 10 seconds. It sometimes insists on pointing to seemingly random locations instead.
- Quirk: If placed near magical objects, the needle begins to vibrate violently.
- Weirding Twist: On rare occasions, the compass points toward places of significance from its wielder's past or dreams.

Raincap

*A felt hat that drips water when worn, regardless of the weather.

- Effect: The hat releases small drops of water every few seconds, as if soaked from recent rain. The water tastes faintly sweet and is always cool to the touch.
- Quirk: If thrown away, the hat reappears in the owner's belongings within 1d6 hours.
- Weirding Twist: On rare occasions, when worn during sleep, the wearer awakens with wet hair and shoes.

Snapping Spoon

*A tarnished spoon that makes a snapping noise when it touches food.

- Effect: The spoon emits a loud snap! when it touches anything edible, often startling people at the dinner table.
- Quirk: It refuses to scoop liquids, passing through them without resistance.
- Weirding Twist: Some say the spoon occasionally swaps food between plates without anyone noticing.

Glitching Candle

*A simple beeswax candle that flickers erratically and occasionally emits strange colors.

- Effect: Once lit, the candle burns steadily for 1d8 hours, but every so often it flickers with eerie green, blue, or purple light.
- Quirk: Shadows cast by the candle seem to move independently for a moment when it flickers.
- Weirding Twist: If left burning in complete darkness, faint voices can be heard whispering from the shadows, as if from another place or time.

The Bestiary

Ryndor is a land full of majestic and powerful creatures, both wild and domesticated. The people of Ryndor have a deep respect for the natural world and have developed close relationships with many of the animals that inhabit their lands. Travelers to Ryndor can expect to see many of these creatures in towns and cities, where they are often used for transportation, labor, and protection. Visitors are encouraged to treat these animals with respect and to learn more about the special bonds that exist between them and the people of Ryndor.

Ryndor is home to a wide variety of magical creatures, both big and small. In the meadows and forests, one might encounter the mischievous sprites, tiny beings with butterfly-like wings who love to play pranks and can sometimes be convinced to offer their aid. The fields and meadows are home to grigs, small, cricket-like creatures who have a love for music and often play tiny instruments or sing in high-pitched voices.

For those traveling through the woods, they may come across pookas, small shapeshifting creatures that can take the form of animals or objects and are known for their love of mischief. In rivers, streams, and lakes, one might find nixies, water sprites often depicted as beautiful maidens with gossamer wings, said to have the power to control the flow of water.

In houses and other dwellings, brownies can be found. These small, helpful creatures are known for their tidiness and their ability to complete household tasks while their human occupants sleep. However, caution should be taken around imps, small horned creatures with bat-like wings who are often associated with dark magic and are known for causing chaos and confusion.

While the magical creatures of Ryndor can be wondrous and enchanting, there are also those that are dangerous and potentially deadly. Travelers in Ryndor are advised to exercise caution and avoid these dangerous creatures at all costs. It is also recommended to seek the aid of a skilled hunter or ranger if traveling in areas where these creatures are known to dwell.

Domestic

Ryndor is a land full of majestic and powerful creatures, both wild and domesticated. The people of Ryndor have a deep respect for the natural world and have developed close relationships with many of the animals that inhabit their lands. Travelers to Ryndor can expect to see many of these creatures in towns and cities, where they are often used for transportation, labor, and protection. Visitors are encouraged to treat these animals with respect and to learn more about the special bonds that exist between them and the people of Ryndor.

Fiery Breath (Recharge 5-6): The dragon exhales fire in a 15-foot cone. Each creature in that area must make a DC 11 Dexterity saving throw, taking 14 (4d6) fire damage on a failed save, or half as much damage on a successful one.

Flaming Ball: As an action, the dragon can curl up in a ball of flames. While in this form, it has resistance to fire damage and can move through a space as narrow as 1 inch wide without squeezing. The dragon can end this effect as a bonus action.

Sleipnir

cost: 5,000 - 10,000 gp

The Sleipnir resembles a massive eight-legged horse, but its form is anything but natural. Towering nearly ten feet at the shoulder, it moves with an eerie elegance, each of its eight legs placing itself in perfect synchronicity—as if time bends around its gait. Its hooves never quite touch the ground; instead, they leave behind shimmering ripples in space, like a stone skipped across still water.

Its coat is a shifting storm of color, rippling between coal black and deep violet, as though clouds of the void swirl just beneath its skin. Strands of mane and tail float like ink in water, trailing behind it in slow, sinuous ribbons that defy gravity and wind alike.

Its eyes—all four of them—glow softly with an inner light, silver and mournful, never blinking. When it opens its mouth, it does not neigh; instead, it exhales a sound like wind through hollow stone, or distant thunder whispered in reverse.

Sleipnir's supernatural speed and agility make it an excellent mount for those who need to travel quickly. While riding Sleipnir, a character gains advantage on all animal handling checks related to riding, and can travel an additional 10 miles per day without suffering exhaustion.

Leighmore Oxen

cost: 500 - 1,000 gold pieces

Leighnmore oxen are incredibly strong and hardy, able to pull heavy loads and work for long hours without tiring. While using a Leighmore ox as a beast of burden, a character can carry an additional 500 pounds of weight without being encumbered, and the ox can work for an additional 4 hours per day without suffering exhaustion.

Trollhound

cost: 1,000 - 2,000 gold pieces

Trollhounds are fiercely loyal and protective of their masters, making them excellent guard animals. While a character has a trollhound as a pet or companion, they have advantage on all perception checks made to detect enemies or intruders within 30 feet.

Dwarven Mule

cost: 750 - 1,500 gold pieces

Dwarven mules are incredibly strong and surefooted, able to navigate difficult terrain and carry heavy loads without difficulty. While using a dwarven mule as a beast of burden, a character gains advantage on all checks made to navigate rocky or mountainous terrain, and can carry an additional 250 pounds of weight without being encumbered.

Cosmic

The Many Mouthed Mother

The Many-Mouthed Mother

The Many-Mouthed Mother is an immense and grotesque aberration, a fusion of chaotic organic shapes with an ever-shifting form. Her body is a writhing mass of warped flesh, covered in countless mouths of varying sizes, each constantly whispering, laughing, or screaming. Eyes occasionally blink open across her undulating form, only to disappear into the fleshy mass moments later. Her presence defies logic—her limbs appear and vanish unpredictably, and parts of her form flicker between dimensions, making it difficult to tell where she truly begins or ends. Her overwhelming size gives the impression of a predator trapped between realities, eternally gnawing on both the physical and metaphysical planes, desperate to consume anything that strays too close.

Her mouths are not just for feeding but also for channeling the maddening influence of the Rift, filling the air with distorted whispers. This constant hum of sound affects everything around her, inducing fear and madness in anyone nearby. Despite her monstrous appearance, there is an unnerving beauty to her—her skin sometimes glimmers like wet obsidian, and parts of her shimmer with ethereal hues that hint at the strange energies she embodies.

Traits

Many-Mouthed Aura. Creatures within 30 feet of the Many-Mouthed Mother hear maddening whispers. At the start of their turn, they must succeed on a DC 18 Wisdom saving throw or take 3d8 psychic damage and be afflicted with short-term madness for 1 minute (save ends at the end of each of their turns).

Riftborn Physiology. The Mother exists between dimensions. As a reaction, she can shift out of sync with reality, granting herself resistance to all damage until the start of her next turn.

Devourer's Maw. The Mother can consume matter—both physical and magical. When she reduces a creature to 0 hit points, she heals 30 hit points and gains advantage on all saving throws until the end of her next turn.

Actions

Multiattack. The Many-Mouthed Mother makes three Bite attacks.

Bite. Melee Weapon Attack: +15 to hit, reach 10 ft., one target.
Hit: 28 (4d8 + 9) slashing damage, and the target must succeed on a DC 19 Strength saving throw or be grappled. While grappled, the target takes 10 (3d6) psychic damage at the start of its turn.

Consume Magic (Recharge 5-6). The Mother devours a magical effect or spell. As a reaction to being the target of a spell, she can end the spell and heal 1d8 hit points per spell level. Creatures concentrating on the spell must make a DC 18 Intelligence saving throw or take 4d10 psychic damage.

Mouths of Madness (1/Day). The Mother summons 1d4+2 mouths in unoccupied spaces within 60 feet. These mouths act on her initiative, biting with a +9 to hit and dealing 3d6 psychic damage. They last for 1 minute or until destroyed (AC 16, 30 HP each).

Legendary Actions (3/Turn)

Swallow Reality. The Mother targets one creature within 30 feet, forcing it to make a DC 18 Wisdom saving throw. On a failure, the creature's soul is pulled halfway into the Rift, rendering it incapacitated until the start of its next turn.

Shift Presence. The Mother teleports up to 40 feet to an unoccupied space she can see.

Echoing Whispers. The Many-Mouthed Mother forces all creatures within 60 feet to make a DC 18 Wisdom saving throw. On a failure, they are frightened until the end of their next turn.

The Many-Mouthed Mother represents the constant hunger of the Rift, consuming minds, bodies, and souls alike. Her warlocks wield power at the cost of sanity, drawing from her insatiable need to devour and grow.

Wild

Hrimfaxi

The Hrimfaxi is a magnificent creature with a snow-white coat that shimmers like diamonds in the sunlight. Its horn is a translucent crystal that glows with an icy blue light, and its eyes are a piercing sapphire blue that seem to see right through you. The Hrimfaxi's mane and tail are long and flowing, resembling streams of silver silk that cascade down its back and legs. It stands tall and proud, with a regal bearing that commands respect and admiration. As it moves, it leaves behind a trail of sparkling snowflakes that seem to dance and twirl in the air. The Hrimfaxi is a rare and magical sight, a symbol of the raw power and beauty of nature.

These creatures have a valuable horn that is sought after for its magical properties. The Crystal Scholars have established strict regulations on the hunting and capture of these animals, requiring permits and extensive documentation for any legal capture. Additionally, they have established protected areas where Hrimfaxi can roam freely and safely, and any unauthorized hunting or poaching is met with severe legal consequences. The Scholars also work closely with local rangers and animal conservationists to monitor the population and ensure that their numbers are sustainable.

The horn of the Hrimfaxi is highly valued for its potent magical properties. When ground into a fine powder and ingested, it is said to have powerful healing properties, capable of curing even the most deadly of ailments. Additionally, it is believed that the horn can enhance one's magical abilities, making it a sought-after ingredient for potions and spells. Due to these properties, the horn is highly prized in the black market, with poachers willing to risk the ire of the Crystal Scholars to obtain it.

Charge If the Hrimfaxi moves at least 20 feet straight toward a target and then hits it with a horn attack on the same turn, the target takes an extra 9 (2d8) piercing damage. If the target is a creature, it must succeed on a DC 13 Strength saving throw or be knocked prone.

Hooves Melee Weapon Attack: +6 to hit, reach 5 ft., one target. Hit: 11 (2d6 + 4) bludgeoning damage.

Horn Melee Weapon Attack: +6 to hit, reach 5 ft., one target. Hit: 8 (1d8 + 4) piercing damage.

Frost Gem Once per day, the Hrimfaxi can produce a Frost Gem from its horn. The gem is worth 50 gp and has the power to cast the ray of frost cantrip as well as the frostbite and ice knife spells (spell save DC 13).

Harunvarp

The Harunvarp is a ferocious creature that dwells in the volcanic regions of Ryndor. It has a bulky body covered in tough, dark-red scales, with large, muscular legs that end in clawed feet. Its head is wide and flat, with two small, glowing eyes and a pair of long, curved horns. From its mouth, the Harunvarp can shoot globs of molten lava at its enemies, causing severe burns.

Despite its fearsome reputation, some brave adventurers have attempted to domesticate Harunvarps, with varying degrees of success. Those who have managed to befriend these creatures find them to be fiercely loyal and incredibly useful, particularly in combat situations where their fiery abilities can turn the tide of battle.

Encountering a Harunvarp in the wild is not for the faint of heart, as these creatures are notoriously territorial and will attack without hesitation if they feel threatened. However, for those who are willing to take the risk, the rewards can be great, as the scales, horns, and other parts of the Harunvarp are highly prized by craftsmen and alchemists throughout Ryndor.

Galdrafell Vorpal

The Galdrafell Vorpals are a strange and chaotic creature that hails from the deep oceans of Ryndor. They are unlike any other creature in the land, and their appearance is both mesmerizing and terrifying.

The Vorpals are a large, gelatinous creature that pulsates with bioluminescent light. They move through the water with incredible speed, leaving a trail of glowing particles in their wake. Their body is adorned with long, thin tentacles that are covered in sharp spines, and their large, gaping maw is filled with razor-sharp teeth.

The Galdrafell Vorpals are known for their incredibly loud and piercing screams, which can shatter glass and disorient anyone within earshot. Their screams are often used to stun and immobilize prey, allowing them to move in for the kill. They are also able to emit a cloud of blinding ink, which they use to evade predators and confuse their prey.

Despite their chaotic nature, the Galdrafell Vorpals are a delicacy in Ryndor, and many fishermen brave the treacherous depths to catch them. Their flesh is said to be sweet and tender, with a texture similar to that of squid. However, those who seek to catch them must be careful, as the Vorpals are known to swarm and attack in large numbers when threatened, and their screams can cause permanent hearing damage to those who are not prepared.

Choose Your Fate

In a world as vast and diverse as Ryndor, every face tells a story, and every soul carries the essence of something greater. This chapter explores the many origins, paths, and choices available to players, offering them the tools to shape characters as unique as the world they inhabit. Whether molded by ancient bloodlines, empowered by the mystical resonance of the astral plane, or drawn to fulfill a calling from within, the people of Ryndor are as varied as the lands they tread.

Here, you will find new player options, including unique races, each carrying the heritage of Ryndor's turbulent history, and classes influenced by the balance between magic, faith, and technology. These options allow players to embody characters with deep connections to the world—whether they are a Sev'rinn attuned to elemental forces, a Cervar druid communing with the natural realm, or a human adventurer carving their destiny in the shifting tides of power.

This chapter offers a glimpse into the inner souls of these beings, exploring how race, class, and essence intertwine. These options go beyond the surface—every culture, tradition, and vocation reflects a belief, a struggle, or a dream rooted in the core of Ryndor's shifting balance. Some beings may draw power from the magic that saturates the land, others from the divine, while some find strength in sheer will, cleverness, or martial prowess.

In this chapter, you will encounter:

- New Races: Ancient and modern beings, each with a unique place in the world's evolving history.
- Expanded Backgrounds: Tailored to reflect the influence of faith, magic, technology, and the Weirding upon the people of Ryndor.
- New Class Options: Paths from every walk of life, and every adventurous road, that match the might land of Ryndor and its powerful influences

Each choice in this chapter is an invitation to immerse yourself in the souls and identities that define the world of Ryndor. Will your character be shaped by the ancient traditions of their ancestors or the mysteries born from the Rift to Nebernoria? Will they bend to fate or defy it? In this land where every soul carries a spark, your choices matter—not just to you, but to the story of the world itself.

Aviari

Aviari

Aviari in Ryndor are a rare sight, known for their aerial prowess and their deep connection to the sky. They have a bird-like appearance with wings on their back, talons on their feet, and beaks for their mouths. The Aviari are commonly seen as scouts, patrolling the skies to keep an eye on the lands below. Their sharp vision and agility make them excellent hunters, and they are respected for their role as the eyes of their community.

Aviari are typically a solitary people, with only small, close-knit communities in mountainous areas or remote cliffs. They are known for their complex vocalizations, which allow them to communicate intricate messages over great distances. Despite their independent nature, Aviari are known to form alliances with other races, particularly those who share their love of the sky and adventure.

In Ryndor, Aviari have played a vital role in the defense of the region. During the War of Benard Peak, a group of Aviari scouts provided vital intelligence to the allied forces, which helped them plan their successful assault on the enemy stronghold. Their contribution to the war effort was acknowledged by the leaders of the allied forces, who granted them a place of honor in the victory celebration.

Aviari Lore

Long ago, the Aviari were believed to have descended from an ancient avian species that possessed the ability to soar through the skies. Through generations of adaptation and evolution, they developed a humanoid form with avian traits, allowing them to navigate the skies with great agility and grace. It is said that the blessings of the sky gods were bestowed upon them, bestowing the gift of flight and a deep connection to the heavens.

As the Aviari evolved, their wings became stronger, their feathers more vibrant, and their beaks sharper. They developed keen eyesight, capable of spotting prey from great distances and discerning even the slightest movements in the air. Their talons grew stronger, allowing them to grasp and manipulate objects with dexterity. Over time, their bodies adapted to handle the demands of flight, becoming lighter and more streamlined.

The Aviari developed a strong sense of community and reverence for the sky, forming small, isolated settlements in high mountains or remote cliffs. They embraced a nomadic lifestyle, exploring the vast skies and seeking new horizons. Their culture became deeply intertwined with their aerial abilities, as they honed their skills as scouts, messengers, and hunters. The Aviari's connection to the sky is not just physical but spiritual as well, with their rituals and ceremonies centered around celestial events and the shifting of the winds.

The Feather of Zephyr

Long ago, when the Aviari were still a young race finding their place in the world, a significant event occurred that shaped their history.

It was during the Age of Ascendance that an ancient artifact known as the Feather of Zephyr was discovered by an Aviari named Aeris Windrider. The Feather of Zephyr was believed to be a gift from the gods, granting the possessor the ability to harness the power of the winds themselves.

Aeris Windrider, a visionary and charismatic leader, became a figure of great influence among the Aviari. With the Feather of Zephyr in his possession, he united the scattered Aviari tribes and guided them towards a prosperous future. Under his leadership, the Aviari developed advanced aerial combat techniques, honing their skills as warriors and protectors of the sky. The legend of Aeris Windrider and the Feather of Zephyr spread far and wide, cementing their place in Aviari folklore and history.

During this time, a powerful deity known as Aerasyl, the Skyward Sovereign, emerged as a patron of the Aviari. Aerasyl bestowed her blessings upon the Aviari people, enhancing their aerial abilities and granting them the gift of avian communication. The Aviari revered Aerasyl as their protector and guide, building temples and shrines dedicated to her throughout their settlements. The presence of Aerasyl in their lives further solidified the Aviari's connection to the sky and their role as guardians of the celestial realm.

The combination of the discovery of the Feather of Zephyr, the leadership of Aeris Windrider, and the divine favor of Aerasyl propelled the Aviari into an era of prosperity and strength. They became renowned throughout Ryndor for their aerial prowess and their unwavering dedication to the sky. To this day, the Aviari cherish their history, passing down tales of the Feather of Zephyr, the leadership of Aeris Windrider, and the enduring influence of Aerasyl from one generation to the next.

Free Spirits

The Aviari possess a combination of traits that are influenced by their bird-like nature and their connection to the sky. They are often characterized as free-spirited, independent, and fiercely protective of their freedom. With an innate desire for exploration and adventure, the Aviari are natural wanderers, always seeking new horizons and uncharted territories.

Their close bond with the sky instills them with a sense of curiosity and wonder, as they possess a deep appreciation for the natural world and its beauty. Aviari are known to be perceptive, observant, and quick thinkers, honing their sharp senses to navigate the skies and spot even the slightest details from great heights.

While they value their independence, the Aviari also understand the importance of cooperation and unity. They form strong bonds within their small, close-knit communities, fostering trust and loyalty among their kin. Aviari possess a deep reverence for their ancestry and traditions, passing down stories and wisdom through generations.

Their avian nature also influences their behavior, as they exhibit traits such as adaptability, gracefulness, and a natural inclination for problem-solving. They are skilled communicators, using a complex combination of vocalizations and body language to convey messages and emotions.

Overall, the Aviari are a proud and noble race, embodying the spirit of the sky and the freedom it represents. They value honor, loyalty, and the pursuit of knowledge, making them valuable allies and respected members of the diverse races of Ryndor.

Mighty Wings

The Aviari possess a distinct avian appearance, with features that reflect their close affinity with the sky. Standing at an average height of 5 to 6 feet, their bodies are lean and agile, built for graceful flight. Their wingspan is generally proportional to their height, spanning between 8 to 10 feet, allowing them to soar effortlessly through the air currents.

Feathers cover the Aviari's body, ranging in colors and patterns that mimic the diversity of birds in the natural world. The hues can vary from vibrant blues, greens, and yellows, to earthy tones such as browns and grays, blending with their surroundings. These plumage variations often represent the Aviari's lineage and regional affiliations.

Their hands are equipped with sharp talons, which provide them with a firm grip and aid in tasks such as hunting and climbing. Aviari have long, slender legs ending in taloned feet, adapted for perching and agile movements. Their heads are adorned with a distinct beak, used for various purposes, including eating, communication, and preening their feathers.

In terms of lifespan, Aviari age at a similar rate to humans, reaching maturity in their late teens and living up to around 70 years. They maintain their physical vitality throughout their prime years, and even in old age, their aerial prowess remains formidable. The weight of an Aviari can range from around 100 to 150 pounds, with slight variations depending on individual build and plumage density.

Overall, the Aviari are a proud and noble race, embodying the spirit of the sky and the freedom it represents. They value honor, loyalty, and the pursuit of knowledge, making them valuable allies and respected members of the diverse races of Ryndor.

Friends to All

The Aviari have diverse relationships with the races of Ryndor. Humans are fascinated by their aerial abilities, while elves share a mutual respect for nature. They form harmonious partnerships with Leoporin, appreciating each other's agility, and work as scouts for the Drakarim despite their contrasting natures. The Aviari and Cervar have a mutually beneficial relationship, combining their skills for successful hunts. Overall, the Aviari are valued allies and respected members of the diverse races, finding common ground and cooperation with those who appreciate their unique abilities and perspectives.

Humans: The Aviari and humans have a mixed relationship. Some humans are fascinated by the Aviari's ability to soar through the sky and view them with awe and admiration. Others may view them as strange or distant due to their bird-like features. However, there have been instances of cooperation between Aviari scouts and human adventurers, working together to explore new frontiers or gather valuable information.

Elves: The Aviari and elves share a mutual respect and understanding of the natural world. Both races possess a deep connection to nature and appreciate its beauty. They often find common ground in their shared love for the wilderness and can form alliances to protect and preserve the natural realms.

Leoporin: The Aviari and Leoporin share a harmonious relationship, as both races appreciate freedom and independence. They admire each other's agility and adaptability, often working together as scouts and messengers. The Aviari's ability to navigate the skies complements the Leoporin's expertise in terrestrial environments, making them effective partners in various endeavors.

Drakarim: The Aviari and Drakarim have a distant relationship due to their contrasting natures. The Aviari's light-hearted and free-spirited nature can clash with the more serious and reserved demeanor of the Drakarim. However, they share a mutual respect for each other's strength and determination. It is not uncommon for the Aviari to act as aerial scouts for the Drakarim, providing valuable information from the skies.

Cervar: The Aviari and Cervar often have a mutually beneficial relationship. The Cervar, being skilled hunters and trackers, appreciate the Aviari's keen eyesight and ability to spot prey from above. In return, the Aviari value the Cervar's ability to navigate the forests and provide ground-based support during expeditions. Together, they form formidable hunting parties and work in tandem to secure resources.

Home in the Clouds

The ancestral lands of the Aviari are a breathtaking expanse of rugged mountains, deep valleys, and expansive sky. Nestled amidst these natural wonders are their sacred sites and cherished havens.

One such place is Aetherwing Cliff, a towering precipice where Aviari gather for important rituals and communal gatherings. The Great Perch, a majestic stone formation jutting out from a mountaintop, serves as a revered meeting place and a lookout point for vigilant sentinels.

The Azure Glades, a verdant valley dotted with shimmering pools and cascading waterfalls, is a serene haven where Aviari retreat for reflection and spiritual connection with nature. Highwind Canyon, a windswept gorge with narrow ledges and treacherous currents, is both a testing ground for Aviari warriors and a training site for mastering aerial maneuvers.

The Aviari capital, Skyrise Citadel, stands proudly atop the highest peak in the ancestral lands. This magnificent city of intricate towers and soaring spires is a hub of Aviari culture, housing the Council of Feathers and serving as a center for learning, trade, and governance.

Throughout these lands, Aviari find solace, purpose, and a deep connection to the sky and the natural world that surrounds them. The Aviari's ancestral lands embody the essence of freedom, adventure, and the boundless possibilities that come with soaring through the heavens.

Sounds of the Sky

Auran, the language of the Aviari, is a melodious and ethereal tongue that reflects their deep connection to the sky and the winds. It is characterized by its flowing cadence, graceful intonations, and a rich variety of vocalizations that mimic the sounds of nature and the songs of birds.

Auran incorporates a wide range of pitch and tonal inflections, with soaring highs and gentle lows, evoking the ever-changing currents of the wind. The language is not solely based on spoken words but also includes an intricate system of whistles, trills, clicks, and soft murmurs, allowing the Aviari to convey complex meanings and emotions with remarkable precision.

In written form, Auran utilizes elegant, flowing scripts inspired by the curves and movements of avian wings. The written symbols often resemble feathers, with intricate patterns and graceful arcs that represent the harmony and interconnectedness of the Aviari with their natural surroundings.

Auran is not just a means of communication for the Aviari; it is a poetic expression of their identity and a profound connection to the elemental forces of the sky. The language is steeped in tradition and is integral to their culture, passed down through generations as a treasured legacy. Through Auran, the Aviari express their thoughts, share their stories, and preserve their history, perpetuating their bond with the skies that have always been their home.

Aviari Phrases

"Feathers intertwined create unbreakable bonds."

Symbolizing the importance of strong relationships and the support of loved ones.

"A soaring heart knows no boundaries."

Meaning that one's spirit and determination can overcome any obstacle.

"Brush of a feather is the touch of truth."

Signifying the importance of paying attention to subtle cues and trusting one's instincts.

Wanderlust

The Aviari are driven to adventure by their insatiable wanderlust and thirst for exploration. The vast open skies call to their souls, urging them to soar beyond their familiar territories and discover new lands. They seek to expand their knowledge, unravel the mysteries of the world, and experience the exhilaration of soaring to great heights.

Curiosity fuels their desire to venture into uncharted realms, where they can witness breathtaking vistas, encounter diverse cultures, and forge new alliances. The Aviari are drawn to the thrill of the unknown, the excitement of encountering ancient ruins or hidden treasures, and the chance to test their aerial prowess in daring feats.

Ranger: The Aviari's keen senses and affinity for nature make them excellent rangers. They can scout the vast landscapes from above, utilizing their aerial advantage to track targets, navigate treacherous terrains, and communicate with animals. Their ability to swiftly strike from the skies with precise archery skills makes them formidable hunters and protectors of the wild.

Rogue: The Aviari's agility, stealth, and exceptional vision make them adept rogues. Their wings provide them with unmatched mobility, allowing them to swiftly navigate urban environments and bypass obstacles. With their sharp senses, they excel in scouting, gathering information, and performing precise aerial maneuvers to outmaneuver foes.

Sorcerer: The Aviari's connection to the sky and their innate magical affinity make them ideal sorcerers. They possess a deep well of raw arcane power, drawing inspiration from the natural elements and the boundless energy of the heavens. They can manipulate air currents, conjure storms, or channel their magic through their wings, becoming a force to be reckoned with on the battlefield.

Bard: The melodious nature of the Aviari's vocalizations and their ability to communicate over long distances make them natural bards. They weave enchanting melodies that evoke emotions and inspire allies. Their songs, combined with their graceful aerial performances, captivate audiences and have the power to sway hearts and minds.

Monk: The Aviari's dexterity, grace, and mastery of their own bodies align well with the monk class. They have honed their physical abilities through years of disciplined training, incorporating their aerial prowess into their combat techniques. Their swift strikes, evasive maneuvers, and ability to harness their inner energy make them formidable warriors.

Cervar

Cervar

Cervar are tall, slender, and graceful humanoids with deer-like features. They have slender legs ending in cloven hooves, and their arms are more delicate than humans', with long, nimble fingers. Cervar have long, slender necks and elegant heads with deer-like features such as large, expressive eyes, and pointed ears. Their hair is usually thick and wavy, and they tend to have a variety of natural colors, including brown, blonde, white, and even silver.

Cervar are a wise and gentle race, with a deep connection to the natural world. They have a natural talent for magic and often use their abilities to heal and protect the forests and animals of Ryndor. Cervar have a strong affinity for the natural world, and their society revolves around their connection to it. They are peaceful beings who seek to live in harmony with nature and avoid conflict whenever possible.

The Cervar's unique physiology provides them with a few special abilities. They have keen senses that allow them to detect things that are far away, and their hooves make them fast runners and agile jumpers. Additionally, their natural magic abilities allow them to cast spells that protect and heal themselves and their allies, making them valuable allies in any adventuring party.

Cervar Lore

The Cervar's connection to magic plays a vital role in their evolution. Their natural talent for magic is believed to have evolved as a response to the magical energies present in their surroundings. Living in harmony with nature, the Cervar developed a deep affinity for the natural world and its energies. Through generations of exposure and practice, their innate magical abilities became refined, enabling them to harness the powers of healing and protection. This affinity for magic is deeply ingrained in their society and is passed down through their cultural practices and teachings.

As the Cervar embraced their magical heritage, they further honed their abilities to serve as guardians of the forests and caretakers of the animals in their realm. They developed a profound understanding of the delicate balance of nature, using their magic to heal wounded creatures, protect the environment from harm, and commune with the spirits of the forest.

While the Cervar evolved physically and magically, their wisdom and gentle nature also played a significant role in shaping their society. Their inclination towards peaceful coexistence and harmony with nature guided their interactions with other races and communities. They became known as wise beings, sought after for their counsel and healing abilities.

Wielders of the Light

he history of the Cervar is rich with tales of discovery, leadership, and triumph over evil forces.

Over the centuries, they have faced various challenges, but their unwavering connection to nature and their innate magic has guided them through tumultuous times.

One significant event in Cervar history was the discovery of a powerful artifact known as the Elysian Crystal. Legends foretold of its existence, and the Cervar, with their deep understanding of magic, were drawn to seek out this extraordinary relic. It was said to possess immense healing and protective properties, capable of restoring balance and harmony to the land. After years of exploration and dedicated research, a group of Cervar mages uncovered the ancient ruins that housed the Elysian Crystal.

The discovery of the Elysian Crystal had a profound impact on the Cervar society. Recognizing its potential to amplify their magical abilities and aid in their quest to safeguard the natural world, the Cervar formed a council of wise elders to oversee the artifact's use. The crystal became a symbol of hope and unity among the Cervar, reinforcing their commitment to their role as protectors and healers of the land.

During this time, a charismatic and influential Cervar leader emerged, known as Elara Sunwhisper. Possessing remarkable magical abilities and a deep connection to the natural world, Elara became a beacon of guidance and inspiration for her people. Under her wise and compassionate leadership, the Cervar society flourished. Elara fostered an era of enlightenment and sought to strengthen the bonds between the Cervar and other races, promoting peace and cooperation.

However, the rise of an influential leader also attracted the attention of dark forces seeking to exploit the Cervar's magical prowess and disrupt their harmonious way of life. A malevolent sorcerer named Morvath the Corruptor, driven by power and domination, sought to harness the energy of the Elysian Crystal for his nefarious purposes. Morvath gathered an army of corrupted creatures and waged a war against the Cervar and their allies.

The Cervar, with their deep connection to nature and their mastery of magic, rallied to defend their homeland against Morvath's forces. Their swift footwork and agile maneuvers allowed them to outmaneuver their enemies, while their healing and protective spells proved invaluable in sustaining their allies in battle. With Elara at the forefront, leading her people with wisdom and unwavering determination, the Cervar resisted Morvath's advances.

The conflict between the Cervar and Morvath culminated in an epic showdown. Elara, drawing upon the energies of the Elysian Crystal and channeling the collective magic of her people, engaged Morvath in a fierce duel. With the aid of her fellow Cervar and their combined magical prowess, Elara managed to defeat the sorcerer, sealing him away in a pocket dimension, forever preventing him from causing harm to Ryndor.

The victory over Morvath the Corruptor marked a turning point in Cervar history. It solidified their reputation as protectors of the natural world and cemented their commitment to maintaining harmony and balance. The tale of Elara Sunwhisper and the defeat of Morvath became a legend passed down through generations, inspiring future Cervar leaders and reminding them of the strength that can be found in unity, wisdom, and the power of their connection to nature.

From that point forward, the Cervar continued to thrive, using their magic to heal the wounded, protect the forests, and promote harmony between races. Their history serves as a testament to their resilience, wisdom, and unwavering dedication to the principles that define their existence.

Simplicity and Harmony

The Cervar possess a distinct personality and nature that reflects their deep connection to the natural world. They are known for their wisdom, gentleness, and harmonious disposition, embodying qualities that align with their role as caretakers and protectors of the forests and animals of Ryndor.

Their gentle and compassionate nature extends not only to the natural world but also to their interactions with others. Cervar are typically peaceful beings who seek to resolve conflicts through diplomacy and understanding. They value harmony and cooperation, and strive to maintain amicable relationships with other races and communities. They possess a deep empathy that allows them to intuitively understand the emotions and needs of those around them.

In their day-to-day lives, the Cervar value simplicity and harmony. They find solace in the tranquility of the forests and often engage in activities that strengthen their bond with nature, such as communing with the spirits of the forest, practicing meditation, or engaging in creative pursuits that celebrate the beauty of the natural world. They have a deep appreciation for art, music, and storytelling, often using these mediums to express their connection to nature and share their wisdom with others.

Peaceful Presence

The Cervar are an enchanting and graceful race, resembling tall, slender humanoids with deer-like features. Their elegant physique is defined by long, slender legs ending in cloven hooves, and delicate, nimble arms with 3 slender fingers. Cervar bodies are covered in soft fur with various patterns and markings denoting their native land.

Though subtle differences exist, both genders possess delicate features, with soft, regal faces. The have large, expressive eyes, and flat black or pink noses. Both male and female Cervar bear striking antlers, often adorned with flowers and symbols of their home land. Elongated, pointed ears crown their heads, attuned to the whispers of the forest. Their hair, thick and wavy, mirrors the hues of the natural world, enhancing their ethereal beauty. With heights ranging from 6 to 7 feet, the Cervar exude elegance and agility. Their lean physiques, toned with muscles, reflect their inherent athleticism.

The Cervar's captivating presence is not limited by age. With lifespans ranging from 150 to 200 years, they retain their youthful appearance long into their later years. Throughout their lives, the Cervar embody a profound connection to nature, their physicality and wisdom intertwined, a testament to their role as caretakers and guardians of harmony in the world.

Gentle Allies

The Cervar, with their gentle and harmonious nature, strive to maintain positive relationships with the other races of Ryndor. Their deep connection to nature often fosters a sense of understanding and empathy towards others, allowing them to find common ground and build alliances based on shared values. Here is an overview of the relationships between the Cervar and the various races of Ryndor:

Leoporin: The Cervar share a particularly close bond with the Leoporin, a feline humanoid race. Both races possess a deep respect for the natural world and have a strong affinity for the forest. The Cervar appreciate the Leoporin's agility and keen senses, while the Leoporin admire the wisdom and magical abilities of the Cervar. Together, they often collaborate to protect and preserve the delicate ecosystems of Ryndor, working in harmony to ensure the well-being of the land.

Drakarim: The relationship between the Cervar and the Drakarim, a reptilian humanoid race, is more complex. Initially, their differences in temperament and values created tensions, as the Drakarim were seen as more aggressive and territorial compared to the peaceful Cervar. However, over time, the Cervar's wisdom and ability to find common ground helped bridge the gap. Through dialogue and understanding, they have forged alliances to address threats that endanger the natural world, recognizing the importance of cooperation in preserving the balance of Ryndor.

Aviari: The Aviari, a winged humanoid race, find kinship with the Cervar in their shared affinity for the skies and the creatures that dwell above. The Cervar admire the Aviari's graceful flight and their ability to navigate the aerial realms. The Aviari, in turn, appreciate the Cervar's wisdom and their dedication to preserving the natural world. Together, they work to protect the diverse ecosystems that exist both on the ground and in the sky, fostering a strong partnership that spans the domains of earth and air.

Humans: The Cervar's interactions with Humans are marked by a mutual respect for each other's strengths and capabilities. The Cervar appreciate the ingenuity and adaptability of the Human race, while the Humans recognize the Cervar's deep connection to nature and their healing and magical abilities. The Cervar often serve as guides and mentors, sharing their wisdom and offering guidance on matters related to the natural world. Human-Cervar collaborations frequently arise in endeavors to protect the environment and promote ecological balance.

Elves: The relationship between the Cervar and the Elves is one of mutual admiration and shared affinity. Both races have a deep reverence for nature and possess a profound connection to the mystical energies of the world. The Cervar respect the Elven craftsmanship and their innate magical talents, while the Elves appreciate the Cervar's wisdom and their dedication to preserving the natural harmony. Together, they collaborate in safeguarding ancient forests and mystical realms, united in their efforts to maintain the balance of Ryndor.

Dwarves: The Cervar and Dwarves have differing perspectives and priorities, but their relationship is built on mutual respect and understanding. The Dwarves' affinity for craftsmanship and mining starkly contrasts with the Cervar's focus on the natural world. However, the Cervar acknowledge the Dwarves' dedication and industriousness, while the Dwarves value the Cervar's wisdom and their magical abilities. Although their collaboration may be less frequent, they find common ground in protecting shared environments and addressing threats that endanger the land.

Verdant Glades

The ancestral lands of the Cervar are known as the Verdant Glades, a vast and breathtaking realm of pristine wilderness. Within this realm, specific places hold deep significance to the Cervar. Solara's Grove is a sacred grove where the Cervar gather for spiritual ceremonies and seek guidance from the spirits of the forest. Starlight Falls is a captivating waterfall that shimmers like starlight under the moon, offering solace and inspiration to the Cervar. The Whispering Woods, an ancient forest, is revered for its mystical aura and serves as a sanctuary for rituals and communion with nature. Serenity Lake, a tranquil body of water, holds mystical properties that enhance the Cervar's connection to nature and their magical abilities. Lastly, Harmony Grove, with its ancient trees, symbolizes the harmony between all living beings and serves as a place of communal activities and celebrations.

These locations within the Verdant Glades embody the Cervar's deep reverence for nature and their commitment to its preservation. They are more than physical landscapes; they are spiritual sanctuaries where the Cervar find solace, seek wisdom, and celebrate the interconnectedness of all living things. The Verdant Glades and its sacred places reflect the Cervar's profound connection to the natural world and their role as caretakers and guardians of the land they hold dear.

Enchanting Words

The language of the Cervar, known as Enchantian, is a melodic and expressive form of communication that embodies their deep connection with nature and their harmonious way of life. Enchantian is characterized by its musicality, with a rhythmic flow that resembles a lyrical song. The language draws inspiration from the natural world, with a vocabulary rich in terms describing plants, animals, and natural phenomena. Enchantian allows the Cervar to express a wide range of emotions and sentiments with precision and depth, using gentle and harmonious sounds that mirror their peaceful nature. It also possesses a telepathic aspect, enabling the Cervar to communicate directly through thoughts and emotions. Enchantian serves as a beautiful means of fostering understanding, unity, and a profound connection with both their fellow Cervar and the natural environment they cherish.

Cervar Phrases

"When the moon weeps, the forest listens."

This proverb signifies the attentiveness and empathy they have towards the environment, understanding that even the smallest changes can have a profound impact.

"Like the river's current, adapt with grace."

his saying encourages individuals to flow through life's obstacles with grace and resilience, just as a river navigates its course amidst various terrains.

"The dance of light reveals hidden paths."

This saying encourages individuals to seek out the hidden truths and possibilities that may be concealed within challenges and uncertainties, as they can lead to unexpected and enlightening paths.

In All Things, Harmony

The religion of the Cervar centers around their deep reverence for nature and the spiritual connection they share with the natural world.

They view nature as a manifestation of the divine and engage in rituals and ceremonies that celebrate its sacredness. Through their beliefs, they recognize the intricate interplay between the physical and spiritual realms, guided by the notion of a divine life force that permeates all living things.

At the heart of their religious practices is the worship of nature itself. The Cervar hold a profound respect for the elements of the natural world, honoring the changing seasons, the cycles of life and death, and the overall harmony that exists within the environment. They celebrate these aspects through rituals and ceremonies that incorporate music, dance, and offerings to the spirits and deities associated with nature.

The Cervar also hold a strong belief in spirit guardians who watch over and protect specific aspects of nature. These guardians serve as intermediaries between the Cervar and the divine, offering guidance, wisdom, and protection. Additionally, the Cervar hold their ancestors in high regard, believing in their continued presence and influence in the spiritual realm. They honor their ancestors through ancestral rites and rituals, seeking their guidance and drawing upon their wisdom.

Central to the Cervar's religious beliefs is the pursuit of balance and harmony. They strive to live in harmony with nature, recognizing the importance of nurturing the delicate balance within the natural world. By doing so, they align themselves with the divine forces and contribute to the greater harmony of the universe.

Destiny Awaits

Driven by their connection to nature, desire for knowledge, compassion, personal growth, and a sense of destiny, the Cervar may find themselves compelled to embark on adventures. Whether it is protecting the natural world from threats, seeking wisdom and enlightenment, assisting friends and allies, pursuing personal growth, or answering a call of destiny, these motivations ignite their sense of adventure. Despite their peaceful nature, the Cervar understand that stepping outside their comfort zone, facing challenges, and exploring the unknown can lead to profound personal development and contribute to the greater balance and harmony of their world.

Druid: The Druid class embodies the Cervar's affinity for nature and their ability to harness its power. Druids have a strong connection to the natural world, can shape-shift into animal forms, and wield powerful nature-based spells. Their ability to communicate with animals and manipulate the environment aligns perfectly with the Cervar's deep understanding and respect for the natural world.

Ranger: The Ranger class shares a kinship with the Cervar's skills and focus. Rangers are skilled trackers, archers, and wilderness experts. They excel in scouting, surviving in the wild, and protecting nature from threats. The Ranger's spells and abilities that enhance their combat prowess and tracking abilities resonate with the Cervar's role as guardians of the natural world.

Cleric (Nature Domain): The Nature Domain within the Cleric class is a natural fit for the Cervar. Clerics of the Nature Domain draw power from the forces of nature, wielding spells that heal and protect. They have a deep connection to the divine aspect of the natural world and can call upon the powers of nature to aid their allies and smite their enemies.

Bard (College of Lore or College of Glamour): Bards possess a versatile skill set and can weave magic through their performances. The College of Lore emphasizes knowledge and versatility, allowing bards to draw upon the wisdom and stories of the natural world. The College of Glamour, on the other hand, focuses on enchantment and charm, reflecting the Cervar's graceful and alluring nature.

Monk (Way of the Four Elements): Monks who follow the Way of the Four Elements can harness elemental powers, which aligns with the Cervar's affinity for natural magic. By channeling their inner energy, they can unleash elemental attacks and manipulate the environment. This class option allows the Cervar to blend martial arts prowess with the natural forces that surround them.

Cervar Traits

The Cervar's magical healing ability, Healing Touch, draws upon their connection to the natural world, allowing them to channel the life energy of the forests and meadows to heal others. Their long lifespan and appreciation for balance and harmony reflect their affinity for the natural world, and their ability to move swiftly through it is reflected in their fast speed. With their Fey Ancestry and proficiency in the Nature skill, Cervar are well-suited to navigating the wilderness and dealing with the fey creatures that often inhabit it.

Drakarim

Drakarim

In Ryndor, Drakarim are a rare and enigmatic race, known for their strength, resilience, and deep connection to dragonkind. They are humanoid in form, with reptilian features such as scales, tails, and sharp teeth. Their skin can range in color from deep red to metallic gold, and their eyes are often slit-pupiled and glow with an inner fire.

Drakarim have a long and storied history in Ryndor, with many legends and myths surrounding their origins. Some say that they were created by the ancient dragons as their loyal servants and guardians, while others believe that they are the descendants of humans who made pacts with dragon deities.

Drakarim Lore

The ancestral origin of the Drakarim is steeped in ancient tales and the echoes of forgotten times. According to the legends passed down through generations, the Drakarim trace their lineage back to a time when the world was young and dragons reigned supreme. It is said that the great dragons, in their wisdom and power, chose certain humans to become their chosen kin, granting them the blood of the dragon and transforming them into the first Drakarim.

The process of transformation was a sacred ritual performed by the dragons themselves, involving a mystical bond between the chosen humans and their dragon benefactors. Through this bond, the essence of the dragons infused their mortal kin, altering their physical form and infusing them with the inherent traits and abilities of dragonkind.

The Dragonheart Shard

In the annals of Drakarim history, the evolution of their race is marked by significant events and the rise of influential figures who shaped their destiny. Ages ago, during a tumultuous period of dragon-human coexistence, a profound discovery altered the course of Drakarim evolution. It was the unearthing of an ancient artifact known as the Dragonheart Shard—a crystalline fragment said to contain a portion of a mighty dragon's essence. This artifact became a focal point for the Drakarim's connection to their dragon kin.

The Dragonheart Shard resonated with the Drakarim, awakening latent dragonic powers within them and deepening their bond with dragons. This discovery sparked a transformative era, as Drakarim individuals began to exhibit heightened physical traits, such as stronger scales and heightened senses. The artifact also bestowed a deeper understanding of dragon magic, allowing the Drakarim to channel the elemental forces associated with dragons.

Amidst this evolving landscape, one Drakarim leader emerged as a figure of profound influence—Vaelthar the Dragonheart. Vaelthar was a charismatic warrior and visionary, who rallied his people during a time of external threats and internal strife. With the aid of the Dragonheart Shard, Vaelthar united various Drakarim clans under his banner, forging a powerful alliance that extended beyond blood ties.

Under Vaelthar's guidance, the Drakarim rose to prominence as formidable defenders and protectors. Vaelthar's legendary feats of valor and strategic brilliance became the stuff of legend, inspiring generations of Drakarim warriors to embrace their draconic heritage. His reign marked an era of relative stability and prosperity for the Drakarim, fostering alliances with dragons and forging new traditions that celebrated the harmony between their races.

The legacy of Vaelthar the Dragonheart endures as a symbol of the Drakarim's resilience and their unyielding dedication to the cause of dragonkind. His story serves as a reminder of the crucial role played by influential leaders in shaping the destiny of the Drakarim race.

Stoic Countenance

The Drakarim people possess a distinct nature and personality that reflects their deep connection to dragonkind. They are known for their inherent strength, resilience, and an unwavering sense of honor and loyalty. The legacy of their draconic heritage is evident in their physical features, such as their scales, tails, and sharp teeth, as well as their vibrant, fiery eyes that reflect their inner power.

Driven by a strong sense of community and a deep reverence for their dragon allies, the Drakarim exhibit a disciplined and disciplined mindset. They are a proud race, valuing tradition and upholding ancient customs that emphasize honor, bravery, and the preservation of their ancestral heritage. Drakarim individuals are often raised with a profound respect for authority and hierarchy, recognizing the wisdom of their elders and leaders.

Despite their imposing presence and warrior-like demeanor, Drakarim possess an innate wisdom and a deep understanding of the delicate balance between power and responsibility. They have a natural affinity for magic, particularly that which is tied to dragons and the elemental forces. This affinity manifests in their ability to harness and channel dragon magic, allowing them to wield fire, thunder, and other forces associated with their draconic kin.

In social interactions, Drakarim exhibit a sense of stoicism and self-control, rarely displaying overt emotions. They prioritize logic and reason, making them highly pragmatic and adept problem solvers. However, their fierce loyalty and protective instincts can drive them to great lengths to defend their kin, allies, and their cherished dragon companions.

Imposing Presence

The Drakarim possess a distinctive and awe-inspiring physical appearance that sets them apart from other humanoid races. They typically stand tall, ranging from 6 to 7 feet in height, with a strong and muscular build that reflects their natural prowess in combat. Their reptilian features include scaly skin that varies in color from deep red to metallic gold, giving them a striking and majestic presence.

In terms of weight, Drakarim tend to be heavier than other races due to their muscular physique. On average, they weigh between 200 and 300 pounds, though the weight can vary depending on the individual's size and physical conditioning.

The physical maturity of a Drakarim is comparable to that of humans, with an average age range of up to 120 years, usually reaching maturity around 20-25. However, some Drakarim who have formed powerful bonds with dragons or have attained great knowledge and mastery of dragon magic can live well beyond a century.

Drakarim reproduction follows a method similar to that of other humanoid races. They are oviparous, meaning they lay eggs to bring forth their offspring. The process involves a complex courtship ritual where potential mates demonstrate their strength, prowess, and compatibility. Once a pair has formed a bond, the female lays eggs that are carefully nurtured and protected by both parents until they hatch.

It is important to note that Drakarim genders do not exhibit exterior physical differences, making it challenging for outsiders to discern the gender of an individual based solely on appearance. Gender roles and distinctions are primarily determined through societal norms and cultural expectations.

Complex Kinship

The Drakarim maintain a complex web of relationships with the various races of Ryndor. Their connections with other races are often influenced by their deep-rooted reverence for dragons and their shared affinity for Draconic culture.

The Drakarim have a particularly close bond with the Leoporin, as both races share a deep connection to nature and the wild. They often collaborate in matters of conservation, hunting, and exploration, appreciating each other's agility and resourcefulness.

With the Aviari, the Drakarim often find common ground in their shared love for the skies. Both races have a deep affinity for flight and a profound appreciation for the freedom it brings. They engage in aerial displays, exchange knowledge about flying creatures, and occasionally form alliances to protect their territories from common threats.

The relationship between the Drakarim and the Cervar is characterized by a mutual respect for strength and honor. Both races value martial prowess and often engage in friendly competitions and martial training. The Drakarim find the Cervar's disciplined nature and unwavering loyalty appealing, fostering a bond built on trust and camaraderie.

The Drakarim's relationship with humans is more complex and strained due to their storied history with dragons, which often influences human perceptions of the Drakarim. While some humans view the Drakarim with awe and fascination, others harbor fear and prejudice, viewing them as dangerous and unpredictable.

The Drakarim, in turn, may approach human interactions with caution, mindful of the potential for misunderstanding and conflict. However, there are instances of Drakarim individuals who strive to bridge the gap and foster understanding between their kind and humans, hoping to heal the wounds of the past.

The Drakarim maintain a respectful but somewhat distant relationship with the Dwarves and Elves. They appreciate the Dwarves' craftsmanship and resilience, occasionally seeking their expertise in forging powerful weapons and armor. As for the Elves, the Drakarim admire their wisdom and affinity for magic, sometimes seeking their guidance in matters of spirituality and nature. However, due to their distinct cultures and priorities, the Drakarim may not have extensive interactions with these races, maintaining a respectful distance while acknowledging their unique strengths.

Mother Mountain

The ancestral lands of the Drakarim, known as Drakemount, are a realm of awe-inspiring beauty and rugged grandeur. Nestled within the towering peaks of Mt. Bannockwyrm, or "Mother Mountain" to the Drakarim, Drakemount encompasses a vast expanse of diverse landscapes and sacred sites. At the heart of this land lies the majestic capital city of Dra'Zirath, a breathtaking metropolis nestled in the shadow of Benard Peak, the tallest peak in all of Ryndor.

Deep within the heart of Drakemount, nestled within the Veil of Embers, lies the Dragon's Maw, a colossal volcanic caldera spewing forth plumes of ash and fire. This sacred site is believed to be the birthplace of the first Drakarim, where their connection to dragonkind was forged. The Eternal Glacier, located in the northern reaches of Drakemount, is a frozen expanse that stretches as far as the eye can see, its icy beauty a stark contrast to the fiery realms of the south.

Throughout Drakemount, various smaller settlements dot the landscape, such as Emberreach, a thriving mining town known for its rich deposits of dragonstone, and Talonrest, a hidden enclave nestled within a series of soaring cliffside caves. These settlements serve as important cultural and strategic hubs, fostering the close-knit community and resilience of the Drakarim people.

Drakemount, with its majestic peaks, fiery landscapes, and hidden wonders, is a testament to the enduring legacy of the Drakarim. It is a land of mythical splendor, where the echoes of ancient dragons still reverberate, inspiring the Drakarim to embrace their heritage and protect the sacred bond they share with their draconic ancestors.

Brutal Tongue

The language of the Drakarim is a guttural and powerful tongue, resonating with primal strength and raw emotion. It is a language forged in the crucible of their fiery ancestry, carrying the echoes of ancient dragons and the weight of their storied history. Each word is pronounced with a thunderous intensity, as if it carries the weight of a dragon's roar.

The phonetics of the Drakarim language are characterized by harsh, rasping sounds and deep, resonant tones. It is a language that demands strength and presence, reflecting the ferocity and tenacity of the Drakarim people. Their words carry a sense of authority and power, spoken with an unwavering conviction.

To the untrained ear, the Drakarim language may sound brutal and intimidating, filled with sharp consonants and rolling syllables. The vocalizations often mimic the sounds of roaring flames, hissing serpents, and the clash of steel, evoking the primal forces of nature and the untamed power of dragons.

Drakarim Phrases

"In the eyes of dragons, the scales of truth are never hidden."

This phrase highlights the Drakarim's reverence for dragons and their connection to truth and wisdom. It suggests that the true nature and intentions of individuals can be discerned by the discerning gaze of a dragon.

"Words are but embers, deeds are the inferno."

This expression emphasizes the Drakarim's emphasis on action and the significance they place on deeds over mere words. It reflects their belief that actions speak louder than empty promises.

"A dragon's tale told thrice becomes eternal lore."

This coloquialism highlights the Drakarim reverence for storytelling and oral traditions. It suggests that a story of great significance and wisdom gains timeless value when it is passed down and retold multiple times, ensuring its perpetuity in the annals of Drakarim history.

Dragonshrines

The religion of the Drakarim is deeply rooted in their reverence for dragons and their divine essence. They believe that dragons are not only mighty and majestic creatures but also divine beings embodying aspects of power, wisdom, and primal forces of nature.

Their religious practices center around the worship and veneration of dragon deities and the acknowledgment of their influence on the world.

Drakarim religious ceremonies often take place in sacred spaces known as Dragonshrines, where dragon effigies and relics are displayed. These shrines serve as places of devotion and contemplation, where Drakarim offer prayers, sacrifices, and perform rituals to honor the dragon deities. The rituals may involve chanting ancient hymns, making offerings of precious metals or gemstones, or reenacting mythical dragon tales through elaborate performances.

The religion of the Drakarim emphasizes the concepts of power, honor, and ancestral connection. They believe in the divine lineage of dragons, considering themselves to be descendants or chosen children of these magnificent beings. They strive to emulate the virtues of dragons, such as strength, wisdom, and self-control, and seek to achieve spiritual enlightenment and communion with the dragon deities.

While dragon worship forms the core of their religious practices, the Drakarim also revere the natural world and its elements. They see the world as an interconnected web of energies and believe in the balance and harmony of nature. Some Drakarim priests and spiritual leaders, known as Scalebinders, possess the ability to commune with dragons and interpret their will, acting as intermediaries between the mortal realm and the divine dragon realm.

The religion of the Drakarim is not strictly organized or unified, with variations and regional differences in specific beliefs and practices. However, the underlying reverence for dragons and the pursuit of spiritual enlightenment through their guidance remain central tenets of their faith.

For Honor and Renown

Driven by honor, glory, a thirst for knowledge, devotion to dragons, or a quest for justice, Drakarim adventurers seek fame, respect, exploration, and the protection of their kin. Their passion for proving themselves in battle, uncovering ancient secrets, and defending dragonkind fuels their desire for adventure and shapes their path in the world.

Barbarian Drakarim Barbarians tap into their primal instincts and the ferocity of their draconic bloodline, becoming formidable warriors on the battlefield. They unleash their rage, gaining increased strength, durability, and the ability to shrug off damage, embodying the raw power of their ancestors.

Fighter Drakarim Fighters are disciplined warriors, honing their combat skills and tactics to perfection. With their strong physical attributes and natural affinity for weaponry, they become versatile fighters capable of wielding a wide range of weapons and adopting various fighting styles to suit their preferred approach to combat.

Sorcerer Drakarim Sorcerers inherit their innate magical abilities from their draconic lineage. They can tap into the raw arcane power that flows through their veins, casting spells that harness the elements, manipulate energy, and evoke the primal forces of nature. Their magic is a testament to their deep connection with dragons.

\pagebreakNum

Warlock Drakarim Warlocks forge pacts with powerful dragons or other draconic entities, gaining access to forbidden knowledge and mystical abilities. They make deals with their patrons, exchanging their loyalty and service for magical powers that grant them eldritch invocations, otherworldly spells, and the ability to command the forces of dragons.

Paladin Drakarim Paladins are devoted champions who embody the ideals of honor, justice, and the mighty dragons they revere. They wield their martial prowess alongside divine magic, smiting their foes with righteous fury and protecting their allies with sacred auras. Their unwavering faith and dedication make them formidable defenders of their draconic heritage and the causes they hold dear.

Khuzud

Khuzud

The Khuzud are an ancient and reclusive race of dwarves, born from a few hundred individuals who rejected their kin's expansion to the surface and remained deep within the earth. While all modern dwarves are descendants of the Khuzud, modern dwarves bear little resemblance to their ancient ancestors. The Khuzud may be rare among the dwarves, but their kingdoms are the most expansive, filled with ancient halls and tunnels carved deep into the earth.

Khuzud Lore

When the Khuzud saw their people push further and further to the surface, a few hundred stood apart in scornful distaste. They remained below, and became the ancient ancestors of the Dwarves factions that split upon the surface.

The Ancient Folk. Direct descendants of the ancient Dwarves. All modern Dwarves are descended from the Khuzud, but bear little to no resemblance to their ancient ancestors. They are the smallest in population by far, but have the most expansive kingdoms of all the Dwarves. Ancient, echoing halls built deep into the stone of the deepest places, the kingdoms of the Khuzud are often empty for hundreds of miles.

The Soul Forge

Modern dwarves like to say that their souls were birthed in the same ancient forge in which the Khuzud now forge their finery and weapons. Dwarves life began deep, in fact the deepest reaches of Onidor are the most ancient. When the first few Dwarven souls sparked into existence, it was in pure darkness. It was the god Moradin who sparked the Soul Forge, which flared to life and thus the Dwarves were birthed in flame and shadow. Moradin, the Soul Forger knew not what creatures he just created, but looked upon them with awe and admiration as they emerged from fire and rock. With fresh awareness, contemplating awareness itself, they found each other. Sightless as they were, the ancient Dwarves began to communicate through sound, and discovered they could detect the world around them with an extra sense that was only present when they clicked their tongues or tapped their limbs against the hard stone surrounding them. Before the Dwarves had homes or names, they invented Inglishmek, the echolocative sign language that is now used only by the lingering Khuzud.

As the Dwarves grew in number, they expanded their territory and began to delve deeper into the earth, uncovering vast veins of precious metals and gems. It was during this time that the Khuzud separated from their kin, choosing to remain in the deep, dark places of the earth. They continued to develop their own unique culture and society, utilizing their echolocation and Inglishmek to communicate and trade with each other.

Despite their separation, the Khuzud remained a respected and revered faction among the Dwarves. The ancient kingdoms they built, such as Milgalor, were considered to be hallowed ground and were visited by Dwarves from all over the world. The Khuzud were known for their unparalleled skill in metalworking, and their weapons and armor were highly sought after by Dwarves and non-Dwarves alike.

Today, the Khuzud are a dwindling race, with their numbers far fewer than the other Dwarven factions. However, their legacy lives on in the magnificent halls and cities they left behind, as well as in the skilled craftsmanship that they passed down to their descendants. To the Dwarves, the Khuzud are a reminder of their ancient past and the depths from which they came.

Solitary Spirits

The Khuzud are solitary, aloof, standoffish, and eccentric. They are more often amused than excited, and slow to make friends and enemies. Khuzud commonly spend most of their life alone, interacting with other members of their race only several times.

While they are quick to obsession with discovery and invention, they are disinterested in social development and conservation. The Khuzud are not an adventurous race, as most of the world beneath has been explored and documented, and the world of the surface is too dangerous a place for their less evolved bodies.

But when they are pursuing a goal in philosophy or invention, they can be focused and relentless. The Khuzud are also not a violent race, but are more than capable of holding their own in combat. Although, since the separation of the Dwarves, the Khuzud have not been violent within their own race and have actually struck a very peaceful balance in their own kingdom.

Deep Ones

Khuzud stand between 4 and 5 feet tall, and are very broad and compact, usually weighing between 200 and 300 lbs. Their skin has no pigmentation, and appears translucent in direct light. Their skin is so thin and fragile in appearance, that most believe if they were to step into direct sunlight, they would immediately turn to stone. Khuzud have no eyes, as there is no need for sight in a lightless world. Khuzud are completely hairless, except for sensitive whiskers that extend the height and width of their body that they use for sensing their surroundings. The only distinguishable characteristics between male and female Khuzud is that these whiskers grow from the chin and upper lip of the males, and from the temples and tops of the occipital bone of the females. These whiskers can vary in color, but generally range from dark grey to pale silver.

Given their slow and efficient metabolisms, Khuzud Dwarves require little sustenance, and live between 300 and 400 years. The gestation period for a Khuzud is about 19 months, and a female Khuzud will bear only one child in her lifetime. Most believe that this limited reproductive cycle is due to limited availability of habitat, as the Khuzud have discovered as much of the deep reaches of the world as is inhabitable.

Clicks and Gestures

Their primary method of communication is a hybrid between tongue clicks intonations and a type of sign language called Inglishmek that they can sense with their hyper developed echolocation system. The clicks help them "see" the signs and symbols formed utilizing their extrasensory ability to "see" using Echolocation. The Khuzud cannot speak the language of the other races, as they do not have vocal chords, but they are known to learn to read and write Common.

Inglishmek Gestures

Raising your right hand with the palm towards your face, thumb and two fingers forming a circle, one finger fully clenched and one finger fully stretched is a gesture that is used after a fortunate event and is meant to cause it to prolong or repeat.

Raising your left hand with the palm towards the sky, two fingers crossed and three fingers half clenched is a gesture that is used to strengthen an agreement similar to making a promise.

Holding your left hand, with the palm towards the sky, two fingers crossed, two fingers fully stretched and the last one fully clenched, against your right hand with the palm towards the side, thumb and one finger forming a circle and three fingers fully stretched is a gesture that expresses the equivalent of 'stop, do not move'.

Holding your left hand, with the palm towards someone else, two fingers fully stretched and three fingers half clenched, against your right hand with the palm towards someone else, one finger fully stretched, one finger half clenched and the other three fully clenched is a gesture that expresses you're not serious about what you're saying.

Reclusive

Khuzud maintain an ancient grudge from before the separation of the races, but have come to rely on the supplies and discoveries of the surface folk to improve their own ways of life. Because of their extended lifespan, they remain aloof of close bonds with most of the other races, but strong friendships and lifelong alliances have been forged through out the ages.

As a reclusive and rarely seen race, the Khuzud have historically had limited interaction with other races. However, when they do come into contact with humans and elves, their unique abilities to communicate and trade can be valuable assets. Their ability to understand sign language through their echolocation system, combined with their ability to read and write in Common, can allow them to overcome language barriers and communicate effectively with other races.

In terms of trade, the Khuzud's skill in mining and crafting makes them valuable partners for the production of metalwork and gems. Their efficient metabolism also means they require less food and resources than other races, which can make them less burdensome as trade partners.

However, their limited reproductive cycle and small population may limit their ability to engage in long-term or large-scale trade agreements.

While the Khuzud may prefer to live in underground or dimly-lit environments, co-habitation with other races is still possible. Cities and settlements that are built into mountains or underground caverns may be suitable environments for the Khuzud to live alongside humans and elves. Additionally, their unique abilities may make them valuable members of society, especially in situations where their echolocation system can be utilized for practical purposes, such as navigating through dark or cluttered environments.

Hallowed Lands

The ancient kingdoms of the Khuzud are the birthplace of the Dwarves race, and so are hallowed ground for all Dwarves. They lie deep beneath the stony faces of the mountains, where they mine precious gems and metals and forge items of wonder. Whatever wealth Khuzud can't find in their vast mountains, they gain through trade.

Expansive systems of underground railways and waterways allow enterprising merchants of the different races to conduct trade between the regions. Some of the railways and waterways even extend between the continents, under deep ocean reaches built ages ago.

Though it is not impossible, Khuzud in surface kingdoms is extremely rare, as it is believed that a Khuzud cannot survive in direct sunlight.

Devout Worshipers

The Khuzud have a unique religion that is deeply connected to their origins and their environment. Their beliefs are centered around the worship of their patron god, Moradin, the Soul Forger, who is credited with creating the first Dwarves from the fire and rock of the earth.

For the Khuzud, Moradin is not only the creator of their race but also the god of crafting and industry, and they hold him in high regard. They believe that everything they create, from weapons to jewelry, is a tribute to their god, and they strive to perfect their craft in his name. Many Khuzud follow a monastic lifestyle, dedicating their lives to the perfection of their craft and the worship of Moradin.

Additionally, the Khuzud also have a deep connection to the earth and the underground environment that they call home. They see the earth as a living entity that must be respected and protected. Therefore, they are keen to protect the earth from any harm and take great care when mining or excavating their underground cities.

The Khuzud also recognize other deities, particularly those of other Dwarven pantheons, such as Dumathoin, the god of mining and underground exploration, and Abbathor, the god of greed and wealth. They believe that these gods, alongside Moradin, can help guide them in their lives and provide them with the strength and wisdom they need to succeed.

The First Adventurers

Retiring the peak of the industrial age in the time before history, popular professions now tend towards philosophic, and scientific ventures, with minor dabbling in the arts. They are still the most legendary metal craftsman and jewelers in the world, and are responsible for the crafting of every wondrous artifact to ever reach popular lore.

Fighter Khuzud are known for their physical prowess and are often portrayed as great warriors. They are naturally tough and durable, which makes them well-suited to the Fighter class. They have a slow metabolism and require little sustenance, allowing them to engage in prolonged battles without worrying about food or water.

Rogue Despite their size and strength, Khuzud are also agile and quick. They rely heavily on their echolocation system and Inglishmek to navigate their world, which could make them skilled scouts or thieves. Their lack of eyesight could also lend itself well to sneaking around in the dark.

Cleric The Khuzud are known for their strong connection to their ancestors and the earth. This could make them excellent Clerics, who draw power from their faith and the divine. Khuzud Clerics might specialize in domains like Earth or Ancestors.

Artificer The Khuzud are expert craftsmen and are skilled at mining and metalworking. An Artificer would be a good fit for a Khuzud character who wants to use their talents to create magical items or constructs.

Khuzud Traits

Age The maximum age of Khuzud is 400. They are considered young until age 60.

Speed Khuzud base walking speed is 25 feet, and is not reduced by wearing heavy armor.

Alignment Khuzud tend towards neutrality, focusing their time on invention, discovery, and advancement. Some are drawn towards Good. Khuzud are rarely Evil.

Sunlight Sensitivity

Khuzud prefer dark and stony places, always underground. Khuzud often suffer damage when exposed to sunlight for too long.

Ancient Ancestry

Khuzud have an innate sense of their surroundings when underground, and underground is always treated as favored terrain. When you make an Ability or Skill check related to your favored terrain, your proficiency bonus is doubled if you are using a skill that you're proficient in.

While traveling for an hour or more in your favored terrain, you gain the following benefits:

* Difficult terrain doesn't slow your group's travel.
* Your group can't become lost except by magical means.
* Even when you are engaged in another activity while traveling (such as foraging, navigating, or tracking), you remain alert to danger.
* If you are traveling alone, you can move stealthily at a normal pace.
* When you forage, you find twice as much food as you normally would.
* While tracking other creatures, you also learn their exact number, their sizes, and how long ago they passed through the area.

Blind

Having lived underground for millennia, Khuzud never developed eyes. They have superior hearing, and can be skilled in combat despite their blindness because of their unique echolcation skill. Khuzud can perceive their surroundings without relying on sight within a specific radius.

Language

Khuzud generally only communicate through Inglishmek and Echolocation. They rarely learn the written language of other races, but it is possible.

Leoporin

Leoporin

Leoporin are a race of rabbit-like humanoids known for their speed and agility. They are skilled hunters and gatherers, and often live in small, tight-knit communities in the forest.

Leoporin are known for their quick reflexes, and are often sought after as messengers or scouts. They have excellent hearing and vision, making them skilled at tracking prey and detecting danger. They also have a natural ability to burrow, which they use to create underground homes and tunnels for their communities.

In historical events, Leoporin have been known to play a crucial role in helping their allies win battles by relaying vital information and providing support. Some Leoporin tribes have even been known to create underground tunnels and traps to defend their communities against invaders.

Leoporin Lore

The history of the Leoporin race is shrouded in myth and legend, passed down through generations of their small, tight-knit communities. According to their ancient tales, the Leoporin were once ordinary rabbits, inhabitants of the vast forests of Ryndor. But their fate took a remarkable turn when they encountered a powerful magical artifact known as the Swiftstone.

Legend has it that a group of rabbits stumbled upon the Swiftstone deep within a hidden grove. As they approached, the stone emitted a radiant light and bestowed upon them the gift of sentience and humanoid form. Overnight, the rabbits transformed into the first Leoporin, with their physical characteristics resembling a blend of rabbits and humans.

With their newfound intelligence and dexterity, the Leoporin quickly adapted to their new form and embraced their enhanced abilities. They honed their skills in hunting, gathering, and burrowing, becoming masters of survival in the forest. Over time, the Leoporin formed small, close-knit communities, valuing cooperation and harmony with nature.

As the centuries passed, the Leoporin continued to evolve both physically and culturally. Their keen senses and agility became more refined, making them unrivaled hunters and scouts. They developed a rich oral tradition, passing down stories, knowledge, and ancestral wisdom through storytelling and songs.

Throughout history, the Leoporin proved invaluable allies to other races in times of conflict. Their speed and agility allowed them to act as messengers, delivering vital information with unmatched swiftness. Their keen senses helped their allies detect ambushes and navigate treacherous terrains. Many battles were won and lives were saved thanks to the crucial role played by the Leoporin.

The Swiftstone

The discovery of the Swiftstone is a tale of both wonder and transformation in the history of the Leoporin. It is said that a young Leoporin hunter named Liria was tracking a particularly elusive prey deep within the heart of the forest. As she followed the trail, she stumbled upon a hidden grove, concealed by a dense thicket of foliage.

Curiosity piqued, Liria cautiously ventured into the grove, her senses heightened with anticipation. It was there, bathed in a soft, ethereal glow, that she discovered the Swiftstone. The stone emanated a radiant energy, pulsating with an otherworldly power. Intrigued by its mesmerizing aura, Liria reached out and touched the stone.

In an instant, Liria felt an immense surge of energy coursing through her body. The Swiftstone's magic suffused her being, awakening latent potential and granting her a deeper connection to the natural world. Her senses sharpened, her reflexes quickened, and a newfound clarity of thought enveloped her.

Word of Liria's encounter with the Swiftstone spread throughout the Leoporin community, filling them with a mixture of awe and hope. Recognizing the potential benefits this magical artifact held for their entire race, a group of Leoporin elders set out on a journey to retrieve the Swiftstone and bring it back to their community.

The return of the Swiftstone marked a turning point for the Leoporin. With its presence, the Leoporin's natural abilities were enhanced, granting them unparalleled speed, agility, and keen senses. They became even more proficient in their roles as hunters and gatherers, able to secure food and resources with greater efficiency. The stone's magical influence also deepened their connection with the forest, allowing them to communicate with animals and plants on a profound level.

The Swiftstone became a revered object within the Leoporin society, symbolizing their unity and shared destiny. It was carefully guarded and kept within a sacred grove, where the Leoporin held ceremonies and rituals to honor its power. The stone's influence reached beyond the physical realm, permeating their culture and traditions, guiding their choices, and shaping their way of life.

With the Swiftstone as a catalyst, the Leoporin flourished as a race, thriving in the forests and establishing their close-knit communities. They developed a profound respect for the natural world, seeking harmony with the creatures and plants that shared their habitat. The discovery of the Swiftstone became a cornerstone of their identity, a testament to their unique evolution and connection to the mystical forces of Ryndor.

Beauty is Speed

The Leoporin people embody the spirit of agility and grace. They possess a lean and lithe physique, perfectly adapted for swift movement and nimble actions. Their bodies are covered in soft, velvety fur that ranges in color from earthy browns and greens to vibrant shades of orange and gold, blending harmoniously with their forested surroundings. Their large, expressive eyes reflect their keen awareness and sharp instincts, capturing the essence of their curious and observant nature.

Renowned for their speed, the Leoporin are gifted with exceptional reflexes and dexterity. Their nimble feet are designed for quick movements, and their powerful hind legs allow them to bound effortlessly through the forest undergrowth.

Whether it's leaping from tree branch to tree branch or navigating treacherous terrains, their agile movements make them formidable hunters and acrobatic explorers. Along with their physical prowess, the Leoporin possess acute senses, with keen hearing that allows them to detect even the faintest rustle of leaves and a sharp vision that can spot the smallest prey from a distance.

Community and cooperation form the cornerstone of the Leoporin society. They live in close-knit groups, forming small communities nestled amidst the forest's embrace. Each individual contributes their unique skills and talents for the betterment of the group, fostering a strong sense of camaraderie and interdependence. The Leoporin value the wisdom of their elders, drawing upon their guidance and experience to make important decisions. They hold a deep reverence for nature, believing in the interconnectedness of all living beings and the importance of maintaining a harmonious balance within their environment. The Leoporin embody a spirit of adaptability and resilience, always finding innovative solutions to overcome challenges and navigate the ever-changing world around them.

Small and Mighty

The Leoporin possess a distinct and charming physical appearance. Standing at an average height of around 4 to 4.5 feet (120-135 cm), they have a slender and agile build that allows for swift movements. Their lightweight frames contribute to their exceptional speed and agility, enabling them to navigate their forested habitats with ease.

The Leoporin are covered in a soft and velvety fur that varies in color, ranging from earthy browns, grays, and greens to vibrant shades of orange and gold. This natural camouflage helps them blend seamlessly into their surroundings. The fur is dense and plush, providing insulation during colder seasons and protection against thorny undergrowth. Some Leoporin may also exhibit unique patterns or markings on their fur, which serve as individual identifiers within their communities.

In terms of gender differences, male Leoporin tend to have slightly larger builds than females, with more pronounced muscle definition. Males often have broader shoulders and thicker limbs, emphasizing their physical strength. Females, on the other hand, possess a slightly more slender and graceful appearance, emphasizing their agility and nimbleness.

The average lifespan of a Leoporin is around 60 to 70 years, with some individuals exceeding this range through the blessings of a healthy and harmonious lifestyle. The Leoporin's longevity can be attributed to their deep connection with nature, their physical resilience, and their ability to adapt to the challenges of their environment.

Cautious Harmony

The Leoporin have unique relationships with various races, shaped by their interactions and shared experiences in the world of Ryndor.

Drakarim: The Leoporin and Drakarim have a complex relationship. While initially wary of each other due to their differing lifestyles and temperaments, they have developed a mutual respect over time. The Leoporin admire the Drakarim's strength and discipline, and the Drakarim appreciate the Leoporin's agility and resourcefulness. They often find common ground in their shared love for nature and the desire to protect their respective territories.

Aviari: The Leoporin and Aviari have a harmonious relationship based on mutual admiration. The Leoporin appreciate the Aviari's grace in flight and their deep connection with the skies. The Aviari, in turn, admire the Leoporin's agility on the ground and their knowledge of the forest. They often collaborate in hunting and gathering, exchanging information and resources to ensure the well-being of both communities.

Cervar: The Leoporin and Cervar share a symbiotic relationship rooted in their shared respect for the natural world. The Leoporin appreciate the Cervar's gentle nature and their ability to navigate the forest with grace. The Cervar, in turn, benefit from the Leoporin's knowledge of edible plants and the protection they offer against potential threats. The two races often coexist peacefully, occasionally assisting each other in times of need.

Humans: The Leoporin have a cautious but generally positive relationship with humans. While they recognize that not all humans may share their respect for nature, they appreciate those who demonstrate an understanding of the balance between civilization and the natural world. The Leoporin may assist humans in hunting or act as guides through treacherous terrain, fostering a level of trust and camaraderie.

Elves: The Leoporin share a deep affinity with the elves, as both races have a profound connection to the forests. They understand each other's perspectives on the importance of preserving nature and maintaining the balance of the world. The Leoporin and elves often exchange knowledge and skills, fostering a sense of unity and cooperation.

Dwarves: The Leoporin's relationship with dwarves is one of mutual respect for each other's unique abilities. While their lifestyles and habitats differ, they recognize the strength and craftsmanship of the dwarves and appreciate their expertise in mining and stonework. The Leoporin may seek assistance from the dwarves in creating durable tools or structures, and in return, offer their knowledge of the natural world.

Verdant Kingdom

Nestled deep within the verdant heart of Ryndor, lies the revered realm of Aelurin. This ancestral land of the Leoporin embodies the essence of natural beauty and tranquility. Lush and vibrant forests, known as Sylvarith, stretch as far as the eye can see, with ancient trees like the towering Eldergrove, enveloping the land in a majestic embrace. The landscape is adorned with crystal-clear, babbling streams and shimmering ponds, like the Serenewaters, offering a haven for diverse wildlife. The air is crisp and fragrant, carrying the sweet scent of blossoms from the Blossomthorn Grove and the earthy aroma of the Forest Floor Haven.

Aelurin, the land of the Leoporin, is a patchwork of dense woodlands and rolling meadows, interwoven with a network of hidden trails and secret burrows known as Earthkin Hollows. These cleverly concealed burrows serve as both homes and sanctuaries, providing the Leoporin with shelter and protection. The land is alive with the vibrant energy of nature, and the Leoporin have a deep spiritual connection with their surroundings. They live in harmony with the flora and fauna, respecting the delicate balance of the ecosystem and ensuring its preservation for future generations.

Aelurin is not just a physical space for the Leoporin, but a reflection of their values and way of life. It is a place of community and kinship, where Leoporin families gather and celebrate the cyclical rhythms of nature. The lands hold countless stories and legends passed down through generations, weaving together a rich tapestry of their cultural heritage. Here, in Aelurin, the Leoporin find solace, strength, and inspiration, embracing their role as stewards of the land and guardians of its delicate equilibrium.

Songs of Mouth

The Leoporin language is a symphony of soft, melodic tones, combining harmonious sounds with a musical quality that resonates with the natural world. The phonetic structure of their language is characterized by gentle, flowing vowels and delicate consonants. The vowels are reminiscent of the rustling leaves in a gentle breeze, with sounds like "ee," "oh," and "ah" that glide smoothly from one to another. Consonants are subtle and lyrical, producing soft and soothing sounds, such as "s," "l," and "m."

The Leoporin language is melodically enchanting, resembling a serenade of nature's chorus. The rising and falling intonations of their speech mimic the rhythm of a tranquil stream, with phrases that ascend and descend like the graceful flight of birds. The language is adorned with subtle inflections, creating melodic patterns that mimic the cadence of a woodland symphony. Conversations among Leoporin are like a dance of melodies, blending harmoniously and creating a tranquil aura that resonates with the world around them.

"May the forest guide you."

This phrase might be used when bidding farewell to someone who is embarking on a journey or adventure, expressing the hope that the forest's guidance and protection will be with them.

"The stars shine upon us."

This phrase could be spoken during a celebration or gathering under the night sky, acknowledging the beauty and influence of the stars on the moment.

"The song of the wind..."

Usually an quiet utterance, this phrase is used to describe the sound of wind rustling through trees, invoking a sense of tranquility or to express the calming effect of a gentle breeze.

"Quick hands, quick deeds."

Usually used when teaching younger Leoporin the importance of completing tasks quickly, by doing it adeptly.

By the Moon

The Leoporin hold a deep reverence for nature, and their spirituality is intricately woven into their daily lives. Their religion, known as Luminarism, is centered around the belief in the divine essence that flows through all living things. They see the world as a sacred tapestry, where every creature, plant, and element is a thread interconnected in a grand cosmic design. The Leoporin believe that by honoring and respecting this interconnectedness, they can attain harmony with the natural world and find spiritual enlightenment.

Central to Luminarism is the concept of the Luminar, the divine energy that permeates the universe. The Leoporin believe that the Luminar is embodied in the celestial constellations that adorn the night sky. These celestial bodies are seen as guiding lights, each representing different aspects of life and nature. The Leoporin pay homage to these celestial beings through rituals and ceremonies, seeking their blessings and wisdom.

The Leoporin religious practices often involve communal gatherings in sacred groves, where they offer prayers and perform rituals to express their gratitude and seek spiritual guidance. They also have shamans, known as Luminari, who serve as intermediaries between the physical and spiritual realms. The Luminari are highly respected members of the community, possessing deep knowledge of herbal lore, divination, and healing arts. They guide the Leoporin in their spiritual journeys, interpreting celestial signs and providing counsel in times of need.

In essence, Luminarism is not merely a religion for the Leoporin, but a way of life that instills a profound sense of reverence, harmony, and interconnectedness with nature. It shapes their actions, fosters a deep appreciation for the world around them, and guides their pursuit of spiritual enlightenment and oneness with the cosmic tapestry of existence.

Driven by Curiosity

Leoporin may be driven to seek adventure by their innate wanderlust and curiosity, a quest for knowledge and discovery, a desire to protect nature and confront threats to the environment, the pursuit of diplomatic alliances and understanding, or a personal journey of growth and mastery. Each Leoporin's motivation may be unique, but their shared yearning for exploration, learning, and personal fulfillment propels them beyond their ancestral lands into the wide world of adventure.

Ranger The Leoporin's hunting and gathering skills make them natural candidates for the Ranger class. Their keen senses and connection with the natural world allow them to excel as skilled trackers, archers, and survivalists. The Leoporin Rangers often form deep bonds with the creatures of the forest and use their knowledge of the wilderness to protect their ancestral lands.

Rogue The Leoporin's speed, agility, and natural stealth make them ideal candidates for the Rogue class. Their quick reflexes and keen senses allow them to navigate through tricky situations with ease. Leoporin Rogues often serve as scouts, infiltrators, and thieves, utilizing their natural abilities to gather information, disarm traps, and strike swiftly from the shadows.

Druid With their close connection to nature, the Leoporin are well-suited to the Druid class. They possess a deep understanding of the natural world and can tap into its primal forces. Leoporin Druids often specialize in shapeshifting into animal forms, harnessing elemental powers, and healing through the power of nature. They act as guardians of the land, preserving its balance and using their abilities to commune with the spirits of the forest.

Monk The Leoporin's natural agility and dexterity make them adept Monks. Their disciplined mindset and focus on martial arts enable them to unleash lightning-fast strikes and perform acrobatic feats. Leoporin Monks often follow a path that combines their physical prowess with their spiritual connection to the Luminar, using their abilities to defend their kin and maintain harmony within their communities.

Leoporin Traits

The Leoporin are a unique race in Ryndor, known for their quickness and agility. They are a small, furry humanoid race that have adapted to their environment by developing powerful legs that allow them to run at incredible speeds.

Where It All Started

Here are some backgrounds that reflect the history, culture, and mysteries of Ryndor. Each background provides new roleplay opportunities, skills, and unique benefits, helping players align their characters with the setting's lore.

Sev'rinn Initiate

Sev'rinn Initiate

You were chosen at a young age to receive elemental attunement under the guidance of the Sev'rinn. Whether you completed your training or abandoned the path, the spark of elemental essence still lingers within you.

Skill Proficiencies: Arcana, Insight

Tool Proficiencies: Herbalism kit

Languages: One of your choice (reflecting cultural exposure during training)

Equipment: A small crystal vial containing remnants of a failed elemental ritual, simple robes, a scroll with notes on elemental theory, a pouch with 10 gp

Feature: Elemental Echoes

Once per long rest, you can subtly influence the environment with elemental essence (a breeze stirs the air, a small spark flares, or nearby water ripples unnaturally).

This effect is minor but can influence NPCs or hint at your connection to the elements.

Suggested Characteristics:

Sev'rinn Initiates often display an air of mysticism and intensity, carrying the weight of their elemental bond. Some embrace their connection, while others are haunted by the power they never fully mastered.

Ban Mynydd Miner

Ban Mynydd Miner

Raised in the deep tunnels of Ban Mynydd, you are accustomed to dark, cramped spaces and dangerous work. Whether you still toil in the mines or left the tunnels behind, the skills you gained underground never left you.

Skill Proficiencies: Athletics, Perception

Tool Proficiencies: Smith's tools

Equipment: A small piece of raw ore, miner's tools, sturdy boots, and a pouch with 5 gp

Feature: Tunnel Instincts

You have advantage on Survival checks made to navigate underground or find your way in labyrinthine environments. You also have a knack for locating weak points in stone structures.

Suggested Characteristics:

Miners from Ban Mynydd are known for their resilience and no-nonsense demeanor. They tend to form tight bonds with companions, treating them as family forged through shared hardship.

Skywatcher of Holmea

Skywatcher of Holmea

Trained among the high spires and floating sanctuaries of Holmea, you are familiar with the interplay of astral magic and the celestial movements. You spent your formative years tracking constellations, unraveling star maps, or communing with otherworldly beings.

Skill Proficiencies: Arcana, Religion

Tool Proficiencies: Cartographer's tools

Languages: Celestial or Deep Speech

Equipment: A star chart of constellations visible only from Holmea, a small telescope, a set of common clothes, and a pouch with 8 gp

Feature: Starborn Wisdom

Once per long rest, you can ask the GM a yes-or-no question about events or locations connected to the astral plane. The answer may come as a cryptic hint or vision during the next long rest.

Suggested Characteristics:

Skywatchers are often philosophical and introspective, driven by a thirst for understanding. Some feel out of place on the material plane, always gazing upward toward the stars or lost in deep thought.

Ghost Whisperer of Dollow Canyon

Ghost Whisperer of Dollow Canyon

The twisted growth of Dollow Canyon is teeming with unnatural spirits, and you've learned to interact with these lingering souls. Whether you act as a guide for lost spirits or a trickster who manipulates them, the ghosts know your name.

Skill Proficiencies: Deception, Religion

Languages: One of your choice (often tied to ancient rituals or necromancy)

Equipment: A simple lantern, a ritual dagger, a journal of ghost stories, and a pouch with 10 gp

Feature: Whispered Guidance

Once per long rest, you can call upon the spirit of a minor ghost to assist you. It provides brief, vague information about a place, person, or event you inquire about.

Suggested Characteristics:

Ghost Whisperers often have a haunted air about them, their mannerisms reflecting long exposure to restless spirits. Some see themselves as guides for the dead; others use their knowledge for personal gain.

Kigan Uldar Champion

Kigan Uldar Champion

You've trained for years to compete in Kigan Uldar, a brutal competition where skill, endurance, and quick thinking are the only things standing between victory and injury. Whether you're a decorated champion or a newcomer aiming to make your mark, your experience on the field has shaped your character.

Skill Proficiencies: Athletics, Intimidation

Tool Proficiencies: One type of gaming set (representing Kigan Uldar miniatures or strategy tools)

Languages: One of your choice

Equipment: A token of victory (like a medal, whistle, or cloth strip from your team), a set of athletic clothes, a waterskin, and a pouch with 12 gp

Feature: Fame of the Field

Your reputation as a Kigan Uldar player grants you recognition. People familiar with the sport may offer you shelter, food, or basic supplies. You can also gain access to competitive events and secure audiences with high-status individuals who enjoy the sport.

Suggested Characteristics:

Kigan Uldar champions tend to be confident, driven, and relentless in pursuit of their goals. They enjoy challenges and thrive under pressure, often displaying a friendly bravado—or ruthless aggression.

Utfordring Diver

Utfordring Diver

Utfordring is not just a sport; it is a way of life beneath the water's surface. You've spent your life training to be agile and strategic in the depths, either as part of an official league or in unsanctioned competitions.

Skill Proficiencies: Acrobatics, Sleight of Hand

Tool Proficiencies: Navigator's tools or water vehicles

Equipment: A diving mask or trinket related to Utfordring, a small waterproof pouch with 10 gp, a game token awarded from a match, and a set of lightweight clothing

Feature: Aquatic Agility

You are adept at moving in water. When underwater, you gain advantage on Dexterity (Acrobatics) checks to avoid hazards or escape grapples. Additionally, other athletes and fans of Utfordring may recognize you, granting you favors or information.

Suggested Characteristics:

Utfordring divers are agile and cunning, using both finesse and strategy. They often embrace risk and have a deep love for the water, sometimes struggling to feel grounded on land.

Weirding Refugee

Weirding Refugee

The Weirding has displaced many from their homes, driving them to unfamiliar lands. You are one of the survivors of a Weird Zone disaster, carrying the scars—mental or physical—of that experience.

Skill Proficiencies: Insight, Stealth

Tool Proficiencies: Alchemist's supplies or herbalism kit

Languages: One of your choice

Equipment: A shard of strange glass from your home, a set of plain clothes, a small journal with scribbled memories, and a pouch with 5 gp

Feature: Touched by the Weirding

Your exposure to the Weirding has left you with an eerie sensitivity. Once per long rest, you can make a Wisdom (Insight) check to predict how an unfamiliar creature or person might react. You also have advantage on checks to understand or resist environmental anomalies caused by Weird Zones.

Suggested Characteristics:

Weirdling refugees tend to be cautious and observant, often haunted by their past. Some cling to hope for restoration, while others embrace the chaos the Weirding has brought into their lives.

Hurstwold Warden

Hurstwold Warden

You have walked the paths of the ancient Hurstwold forest, learning to navigate its treacherous terrain and to coexist with its mystical inhabitants. Whether as a guide, scout, or guardian, the forest has become your second home.

Skill Proficiencies: Nature, Stealth

Tool Proficiencies: Herbalism kit

Languages: Sylvan

Equipment: A wooden charm from the forest, a hunting knife, a cloak made from enchanted leaves, and a pouch with 10 gp

Feature: Friend of the Forest

You have an innate understanding of natural magic and the spirits within Hurstwold. You can move through difficult terrain in the forest without penalty, and creatures native to the forest are less likely to see you as a threat.

Suggested Characteristics:

Wardens of Hurstwold are often calm, patient, and observant. They are deeply connected to nature and tend to be wary of cities and large crowds, preferring the solitude of the forest.

Surreymouth Trader

Surreymouth Trader

You grew up navigating the bustling markets and docks of Surreymouth, learning to haggle, bargain, and move goods with ease. Whether your trade is legal or illicit, you've mastered the art of negotiation.

Skill Proficiencies: Deception, Insight

Tool Proficiencies: Vehicles (water) or one type of gaming set

Languages: One of your choice

Equipment: A ledger of trade contacts, a set of fine clothes, a satchel with small samples of exotic goods, and a pouch with 15 gp

Feature: Marketplace Connections

You know how to find the best deals—or bend the rules—when dealing with merchants. Once per long rest, you can secure a discount or locate a rare item (subject to GM approval). You can also use your contacts to gather rumors and information.

Suggested Characteristics:

Surreymouth traders are opportunistic, quick-witted, and resourceful. They are always looking for the next deal and know that every connection has

A Class of Your Own

Masters of Their Own Fate – The Classes of Ryndor

In Ryndor, the path an individual takes is not just a matter of skill or heritage—it is an expression of their place in a world teetering between tradition, magic, technology, and chaos. From the disciplined fighter honing their technique on the battlefields of the Ardal Plains to the elusive rogue navigating the shadows of Surreymouth's underbelly, the classes in Ryndor reflect the diverse ways people have learned to thrive, survive, and shape their world.

Every class in Ryndor is more than a collection of abilities; it is an identity shaped by the land's intricate balance between the natural, the arcane, and the strange. Those who live by the sword are as respected as those who wield magic, and innovation can come from either faith or steel. Yet, the introduction of The Weirding—that chaotic rift between worlds—has reshaped what it means to follow these paths. Some individuals find strength in tradition, upholding ancient customs that once guided their ancestors. Others embrace the change, twisting strange magic and technology to forge a new future for Ryndor.

In this chapter, we present the classes as they exist within the world of Ryndor, detailing how each class not only survives but thrives in a setting where magic pulses unpredictably, faith provides both hope and power, and technology competes with the old ways for dominance. Whether your character follows the way of the sword, spell, or spirit, their journey through this world will be shaped by choices—choices that will ripple outward, affecting not only their own fate but the fate of Ryndor itself.

Each class finds new dimensions within the world of Ryndor. Clerics of the Skola in Holmea channel celestial energy through ancient texts and crystal lenses, while warlocks bargain with beings that linger too close to the rift to Nebernoria. Fighters serve as bodyguards to nobles vying for control in Eveltoft's council chambers, and druids guard the last untouched pockets of wilderness from Weirded corruption. Rogues and bards whisper in back alleys and taverns, spreading rumors or secrets that can topple kingdoms.

The paths of Kigan Uldar and Utfordring are reflected here, as well—those who train not only for battle but for spectacle, pushing their bodies and minds to the limit in feats of athleticism and daring that inspire entire communities. In a world where physical prowess is admired as much as arcane mastery, adventurers may find themselves facing challenges that demand both cunning and strength.

The power of choice and the consequence of action lie at the heart of every class in Ryndor. Will your character uphold the traditions of their ancestors, seeking to restore what was lost? Will they delve into the secrets of the Weirding, seeking knowledge at any cost? Or will they carve their own path, defining their role in a world that offers both danger and possibility at every turn?

The classes of Ryndor offer infinite possibilities, each tied to the forces that shape the land. It is up to you to decide which of these forces your character will wield—and how they will face the challenges that await.

Barbarian

Barbarian: The Untamed Spirit of Ryndor

Barbarians in Ryndor are more than warriors—they are primal forces bound to the land, embodying the wild, unyielding spirit of the world itself. In a land where nature's fury shapes the very culture, barbarians are revered and feared in equal measure. They are living tempests, forces of pure instinct and will, drawn from the deepest roots of Ryndor's wilds and mystical forces. Whether shaped by the crashing waves along Surreymouth's harbors, the raging fires within Ban Mynydd's forges, or the howling winds of the Bannockwyrm peaks, Barbarians in Ryndor are unpredictable forces, unleashed to conquer or protect.

Origins of the Barbarian Spirit

Every barbarian in Ryndor carries with them a story of survival. Many have grown up in the untamed expanses of Hurstwold Forest or the dangerous Dollow Canyon, where the land itself tests one's mettle daily. Others trace their rage to ancient ancestors who defied oppression, especially those who fought in the Sev'rinn Rebellion, their fury echoing through generations as a legacy of resistance. Some barbarians are wanderers, shaped by a nomadic existence and a deep connection to the natural and spiritual forces of the world.

While they may come from vastly different regions and backgrounds, all barbarians share an affinity for raw emotion—a connection to the world not through logic or study, but through feeling, instinct, and rage. They understand that the delicate balance between creation and destruction that defines Ryndor must sometimes be disrupted to achieve change.

Barbarians and the Weirding

Barbarians have a complex relationship with the Weirding, the strange and unpredictable phenomenon born from the friction between Ryndor and Nebernoria. For some, the Weirding is an unwelcome curse that disrupts their control, as time shifts unpredictably or landscapes dissolve before their eyes. For others, it is a gift—another chaotic force to harness and channel through their rage. Stories tell of barbarians who have wandered into Weird Zones and returned altered, their very essence marked by the phenomena—time-scarred warriors who fight with unnatural precision or power that shifts like a storm on the horizon.

Some clans, especially those in remote areas, revere the Weirding as an extension of the natural world, seeing it as proof that the land is alive and evolving. These barbarians often experiment with strange relics and artifacts, willing to risk corruption for a taste of the Weirding's potential. Others serve as protectors against its dangers, confronting beasts twisted by the Weirding and guarding settlements near unstable zones.

The Role of Barbarians in Ryndor's Society

Barbarians are often outsiders to the cities and organized powers of Ryndor. Many hail from regions where Kigan Uldar and Utfordring competitions are more than sport—they are tests of survival, where strength and cunning are honored above all else. In places like Norwycke or the Ardal Plains, a barbarian's rage is seen as a tool of justice, a way to protect the weak and mete out vengeance against oppressors.

Some barbarian clans serve as guardians of sacred places, like the ancient groves of Hurstwold or the treacherous jungle depths of Dollow Canyon. Others act as mercenaries or bounty hunters, employed by guilds in Surreymouth or Ban Mynydd to hunt down dangerous prey. While the cities of Ryndor may view barbarians with caution, they are also respected for their unwavering resolve, often called upon in times of crisis when brute force is needed to protect against invading forces or unnatural threats.

Paths Unique to Ryndor

Barbarians in Ryndor are shaped not only by their innate rage but by the worlds they inhabit. Many follow primal paths unique to their regions, their powers reflecting the environment or forces that shaped them. Whether they embody the unstoppable fury of nature, the essence of ancient storms, or even tap into the chaos of the Weirding, each barbarian is a reflection of the wild, untamed heart of Ryndor.

These warriors stand apart from organized military orders, refusing the constraints of laws or rulers. Instead, they act with the freedom of those who answer only to their instincts, embodying the principle that power lies in action, not in words. In a world as unpredictable and volatile as Ryndor, where change is inevitable and survival is hard-won, barbarians are the primal answer to a simple truth: strength, in all its forms, endures.

Path of the Howling Tempest

Barbarian: Path of the Howling Tempest

Barbarians who follow the Path of the Howling Tempest draw their rage from the elemental winds and storms that surge across the jagged terrain of Ryndor. These warriors embody the unpredictable fury of the storm—violent, swift, and relentless. In their rage, they move like a tempest, their attacks accompanied by bursts of wind and thunder. The Howling Tempest barbarians harness the essence of the storm not only for destruction but to protect allies caught in nature's fury. Their presence on the battlefield is heralded by gales that buffet their foes and empower their comrades.

Path of the Howling Tempest Features

Stormbound Rage

3rd-level Path of the Howling Tempest feature

When you rage, the winds howl around you and carry your fury across the battlefield. While raging, your movement speed increases by 10 feet, and whenever you move at least 10 feet toward a creature and hit it with a melee weapon attack, the target takes an additional 1d6 thunder damage. This damage increases to 2d6 at 10th level and 3d6 at 14th level.

Additionally, while raging, the area within 10 feet of you becomes difficult terrain for your enemies. The winds swirl at your command, slowing their movement.

Gale's Reprieve

6th-level Path of the Howling Tempest feature

The storm carries you out of danger. When a creature within 30 feet of you makes an attack against you or an ally, you can use your reaction to cause a powerful gust to push you or your ally 10 feet in any direction. This movement does not provoke opportunity attacks.

You can use this feature a number of times equal to your Constitution modifier (minimum of 1). You regain all expended uses when you finish a long rest.

Tempest's Embrace

10th-level Path of the Howling Tempest feature

Your rage channels the raw fury of storms. While raging, you gain resistance to lightning and thunder damage. Additionally, whenever you take damage from a creature within 10 feet of you, the storm lashes back—forcing the creature to make a Strength saving throw (DC = 8 + your proficiency bonus + your Constitution modifier). On a failed save, the creature is pushed 15 feet away from you.

Eye of the Storm

14th-level Path of the Howling Tempest feature

You learn to calm the storm within yourself, creating a protective aura in the heat of battle. As an action while raging, you can summon the Eye of the Storm, a 20-foot-radius aura centered on you that lasts for 1 minute. While in this aura:

- You and friendly creatures have advantage on Dexterity saving throws.
- All ranged weapon attacks against you and friendly creatures have disadvantage.
- You and friendly creatures gain resistance to lightning and thunder damage.

Once you use this feature, you can't do so again until you finish a long rest.

Bard

The Bard: Weavers of Fate and Song

In Ryndor, the Bard is more than just a performer—they are storytellers, historians, diplomats, and conduits of ancient truths. In a world balanced precariously between the forces of the natural, the arcane, and the Weirding, bards wield the power of expression to bridge divides, stir emotions, and shift the tides of fate itself. Whether inspiring warriors on the battlefield, spreading subversive tales in noble courts, or chronicling the strange phenomena of The Weirding, bards stand at the nexus of magic and influence.

The Role of Bards in Ryndor

Every bard in Ryndor embodies the idea that knowledge, creativity, and music are forces capable of shaping reality. In the great halls of Eveltoft, bards serve as advisers, spinning intricate webs of words to influence political decisions and manipulate shifting alliances. In the black markets of Surreymouth, clever bards weave tales of fortune and caution to sway deals in their favor. Some serve as emissaries, traveling between the major cities—Norwycke, Ban Mynydd, and Wyrmbost—using their charisma and wit to build fragile peace between factions.

With the emergence of The Weirding, bards have taken on new responsibilities—and dangers. Strange melodies and half-forgotten songs now echo in unpredictable patterns, seemingly drawn from the rift to Nebernoria. Some bards have begun to explore these eerie harmonies, crafting new spells and performances to harness the Weirding's unstable energies. Yet the cost is high. Bards who channel the Weirding too deeply often return altered or afflicted, with new songs in their repertoire—along with haunting memories they can never quite escape.

Traditions of Performance and Lore

Not all bards seek out the strange energies of the Weirding. Many uphold the ancient tradition of the Skalds, who once traveled Ryndor, chronicling battles and memorializing heroes through epic poems and ballads. These Skaldic bards find power in recalling Ryndor's oldest legends—some believe the act of retelling these stories strengthens the land itself, preventing further destabilization from the Weirding.

Kigan Uldar and Utfordring games have also created new paths for bards, as they turn arenas into theaters of spectacle and sport. Arena Bards are celebrated as much for their charisma as for their spellwork, their stirring songs becoming an integral part of the competitive atmosphere. Victory in the Deep League is marked by both physical prowess and the brilliance of the accompanying performance, creating heroes who are immortalized in song across the land.

The Bardic Styles of Ryndor's Races

- Humans: Bards among the human population blend diverse influences, mastering both ancient storytelling techniques and cutting-edge performance magic. Human bards often serve as political advisers or wandering troubadours, using their versatility to adapt to any audience.
- Elves: Elven bards focus on elegant, intricate melodies that weave illusion and charm into their performances. Their songs are often seen as subtle spells, with magic hidden in every harmony and poetic verse. Elves are particularly skilled at manipulating Primordial Resonance, allowing their music to harmonize with the natural world.
- Dwarves: Dwarven bards prefer epic tales accompanied by booming chants and percussion. Their performances honor ancestral heroes, and their songs contain powerful evocations that inspire allies to stand firm even in the direst of battles.
- Sev'rinns: Sev'rinn bards explore the intersections between magic and emotion, focusing on the essence of memory and transformation. Their songs can evoke lost dreams or reshape a listener's perspective, reflecting their deep connection to the ever-changing forces of Ryndor.
- Cervar: Cervar bards emphasize movement and dance, using their performances to mimic the fluidity of nature. Their songs are often playful, imitating the sounds of forests and rivers, yet layered with hidden meanings and insights.

Weirding-Touched Bards

Some bards in Ryndor have begun to explore The Weirding's strange echoes, discovering how unstable resonance patterns can create powerful, albeit unpredictable, magic. These Weirding-Touched bards are considered both geniuses and outcasts—capable of shaping reality with unsettling melodies, but often at the cost of their own sanity. Instruments exposed to the Weirding hum with chaotic energy, shifting in shape or producing dissonant, otherworldly tones.

A new subset of spells has emerged among these bards, tapping into the essence of change, memory, and temporal distortion. Some Weirding-Touched bards have even learned to weave their spells into conversations, allowing them to alter time and perception during moments of diplomacy, interrogation, or combat. However, using such magic is fraught with risk, and those who delve too deeply into the Weirding are often left scarred by the experience.

Becoming a Bard in Ryndor

To become a bard in Ryndor is to embrace the dual role of artist and storyteller, historian and magician. It is to know that every performance, every song, and every tale carries the potential to shift the fate of the world. As a bard, your words are both shield and sword, and your magic lies in the belief that the world can be remade by those brave enough to imagine it.

You may choose to follow traditional paths, embracing the ancient ways of the Skalds or the intricate arts of diplomacy. Alternatively, you might walk the untrodden paths of the Weirding, unraveling the strange melodies hidden beyond the Rift, knowing that every note you play is both a gift and a curse.

What will you leave behind in Ryndor's story? Will your songs inspire nations or awaken old terrors? Will your art bring unity or discord? In Ryndor, the power to shape the world rests not only in what you say—but in how well you say it.

College of Lanterns

College of Lanterns

The College of Lanterns draws its power from more than mere light. These bards harness the strange energies of the Weirding, using their lanterns to part the veil between what is seen and what truly is. Through the soft glow of their enchanted lanterns, the deceptions of the world melt away, exposing hidden truths, illusions, and the eerie fingerprints of the Weirding.

Lantern Bards are trusted guides in uncertain times, revealing the true nature of people, objects, and places. They tread the line between known reality and the twisted influence of the Weirding, offering clarity where others see confusion. To follow the path of the Lantern is to embrace the unknown—and to illuminate it for others.

College of Lanterns Features

Guiding Light

3rd-level College of Lanterns feature

When you join the College of Lanterns at 3rd level, you gain the ability to summon a magical lantern infused with the light of the Weirding. As an action, you can summon a Weirdlight Lantern that floats near you and emits bright light in a 30-foot radius and dim light for an additional 30 feet. This lantern lasts for 1 hour or until you dismiss it (no action required).

While the lantern is active, you and your allies gain the following benefits:

- Revealing Glow: Inside the lantern's bright light, illusions falter, and any shape-shifting creatures or magically disguised objects revert to their true forms.
- Whispers of the Weirding: When a creature or object influenced by the Weirding is within the bright light, it glimmers with a spectral outline, and you have advantage on Wisdom (Insight) checks to understand its purpose or origin.
- Illuminated Path: Creatures of your choice in the light gain advantage on Wisdom (Perception) checks and cannot be surprised.

You can use this feature a number of times equal to your proficiency bonus, and you regain all expended uses when you finish a long rest.

Lantern of Clarity

6th-level College of Lanterns feature

Your lantern gains the power to cut through the mental fog created by the Weirding. While your Weirdlight Lantern is active, you and your allies gain the following benefits:

- Pierce the Veil: When inside the bright light, creatures have advantage on saving throws against fear, charm, and confusion effects.

- Unmask the Twisted: You can use a bonus action to reveal one hidden magical or weirded influence on a creature, object, or area within 30 feet of the lantern's light. The influence becomes visible, outlined by eerie flickering light until the end of your next turn, granting advantage on any Arcana or Investigation checks to understand or dispel it.

Additionally, while your lantern is active, you can cast detect magic or identify once without expending a spell slot. You regain the ability to cast these spells in this way after finishing a long rest.

Radiant Lantern of the Weirding

14th-level College of Lanterns feature

At 14th level, your lantern becomes a powerful conduit for the Weirding's strange energy, revealing not only hidden truths but the deeper, unsettling nature of reality itself. When you summon your Weirdlight Lantern, you can choose for it to gain the following additional properties:

- Weirdlight Surge: Creatures of your choice within the bright light must succeed on a Wisdom saving throw (DC = your spell save DC) or become dazed until the end of their next turn, overwhelmed by visions of their true selves and hidden fears.

- Lantern of Duality: Inside the light, weirded objects or creatures temporarily revert to their pre-weirded state, and any curse or twisted influence is temporarily suspended. This effect lasts while the creature or object remains inside the lantern's bright light and ends immediately when they leave its radius.

- Weirding Resonance: Whenever a creature inside the bright light takes damage from a spell or magical attack, it takes additional psychic damage equal to your Charisma modifier (minimum of 1).

Once you activate these abilities, you can't do so again until you finish a long rest.

Role of the College of Lanterns in Ryndor

In a world reshaped by the Weirding, the College of Lanterns has become more important than ever. Lantern Bards travel to places touched by the Weirding, using their magic to reveal the truth beneath the twisted surface. They are called to investigate strange occurrences, guide expeditions into weirded zones, and uncover the origins of mysterious artifacts and beings.

In Eveltoft, Lantern Bards are often found at the Rift to Nebernoria, helping scholars decode astral phenomena and determine the true nature of recovered objects. Many also accompany adventurers deep into wild and weirded lands, where reality shifts and lies may take shape. They serve not only as performers and storytellers but also as guides through the blurred edges of reality, ensuring that the light of understanding prevails against the Weirding's dark distortions.

Lantern Bards are sought after for both practical and spiritual counsel, using their gifts to provide clarity, wisdom, and hope in uncertain times. But theirs is not an easy path—they are called to illuminate truths that others may prefer to leave hidden.

Following the way of the lantern is a promise to reveal, no matter how unsettling the truth may be.

Cleric

The Cleric Class in Ryndor

"The gods speak through song, through silence, and sometimes through storms. What matters is not just listening—but knowing how to respond."

Clerics in Ryndor are powerful conduits of divine will, individuals who wield the blessings of gods and cosmic forces to shape the world around them. In a land where the Weirding disrupts both physical and spiritual realities, the role of a cleric has never been more vital—or more complex. Whether calling upon ancestral spirits, channeling astral resonance, or wielding divine fire, clerics walk a path that demands unwavering faith, quick thinking, and a heart willing to face the unknown.

The Nature of Divinity in Ryndor

The people of Ryndor worship a wide array of gods, spirits, and cosmic entities—some ancient, others born from the chaos of the Weirding itself. Faith in Ryndor isn't always about reverence alone; it's about alignment with a greater purpose. Clerics see their power as both a gift and a responsibility, their actions rippling outward in ways that alter reality itself. As guardians of both the physical world and spiritual realms, clerics serve on the front lines against both mundane threats and supernatural phenomena.

Some clerics strive to restore order and stabilize regions affected by the Weirding, while others delve into its chaotic potential, believing disruption is the first step toward creation. Regardless of their path, every cleric must tread carefully, as even divine power can falter or mutate in ways that defy understanding.

Faith and the Weirding

The Weirding has added new challenges—and opportunities—for clerics. Some regions of Ryndor have become spiritually fractured, and divine magic behaves unpredictably within the Weird Zones. In some cases, prayers are answered with strange, unintended consequences, or visions come from long-forgotten gods who stir in the rift between planes. Clerics attuned to these disturbances may develop strange new abilities—or encounter beings who demand dangerous bargains in exchange for power.

For many clerics, maintaining faith has become a daily struggle, as the cosmic forces they serve are no longer as stable or predictable as they once seemed. The faithful must learn to adapt, becoming both guides and protectors in a world that now teeters between planes of existence.

Role of Clerics in Ryndor's Society

Clerics hold unique positions of influence in Ryndor. In cities like Eveltoft, they serve as advisors, healers, and judges, helping to resolve disputes and maintain balance within society. Rural communities often rely on clerics as spiritual leaders and protectors, offering guidance through both divine teachings and practical magic.

However, not all clerics are celebrated—distrust and superstition linger in areas where the Weirding has caused divine magic to behave unpredictably, leaving some wary of the clergy's intentions.

In some regions, particularly those touched by the Sev'rinn influence, clerics combine their religious teachings with elemental magic to enhance their abilities, crafting strange rituals that call upon both divine and natural forces. Others ally themselves with powerful city-states or guilds, wielding their magic in exchange for influence, wealth, or knowledge.

Clerics and the Weirding Conflict

Clerics play a pivotal role in the battle against the Weirding. In regions where the Weird Zones blur the lines between planes, clerics must use their magic to stabilize the area—or risk becoming part of the chaos themselves. Some clerics form alliances with scholars and wizards to study the effects of the Weirding, hoping to unlock its mysteries and tame its power. Others, more cautious, warn that meddling with such forces invites ruin.

Not all clerics agree on how to confront the Weirding. Some see it as a test of faith, sent by the gods to challenge Ryndor's people. Others believe the Weirding is evidence of divine imbalance, requiring new rituals and practices to restore cosmic harmony. Whatever their perspective, clerics must navigate not only the dangers of the physical world but also the shifting spiritual landscape that the Weirding has left in its wake.

Adventuring as a Cleric in Ryndor

Many clerics feel called to adventure, drawn to restore order where the Weirding has brought chaos—or spread their influence to regions in need. Some embark on personal quests, seeking answers from the gods or searching for ancient relics hidden within the ruins of fallen civilizations. Others become reluctant wanderers, carried by fate to places where their magic is needed most.

When playing a cleric in Ryndor, consider:

- What is your relationship with the gods? Do you serve willingly, or out of duty, fear, or personal ambition?
- How does the Weirding affect your faith? Do you see the chaos as a threat to be overcome, or a force to be harnessed?
- What role do you play in your community? Are you a healer, a warrior, a teacher—or something more mysterious?
- What are your goals as an adventurer? Do you seek knowledge, redemption, power—or something altogether unknown?

Domain of Resonance

Domain of Resonance

"All things vibrate with meaning—some in harmony, others in discord. The faithful walk the path between both."

Clerics of the Resonance Domain are attuned to the magical frequencies that ripple through the planes, especially the material and astral realms. They believe in the delicate balance between order and chaos, working as guides who help align the world's vibrations, or disrupt them when needed. The Weirding has heightened the influence of this domain, as the collision of planes distorts magical resonance, leaving clerics of this path both revered and feared for their insight into unstable forces.

Resonance Domain clerics are equal parts musicians, mystics, and spiritual scientists, using their magic to attune energies, influence emotions, and uncover hidden truths. They are often sought after for their ability to stabilize wild magic zones and dispel strange phenomena. However, their power comes with the risk of drawing the attention of unpredictable astral beings.

Domain Features

Cleric Level	Feature
1st	Domain Spells, Vibrational Insight
2nd	Channel Divinity: Amplify Vibration
6th	Harmonic Surge
8th	Divine Strike (Thunder)
17th	Cosmic Resonance

Domain Spells

Clerics of the Resonance Domain learn spells that align with their role as manipulators of sound, energy, and perception.

Cleric Level	Spells
1st	Dissonant Whispers, Thunderwave
3rd	Shatter, Calm Emotions
5th	Dispel Magic, Hypnotic Pattern
7th	Greater Invisibility, Freedom of Movement
9th	Modify Memory, Wall of Force

Vibrational Insight (1st Level)

At 1st level, you gain proficiency in either Performance or Arcana. In addition, you can cast Detect Magic at will, but only as a ritual. When you use this feature, you hear subtle vibrations that reveal the aura or intent of a magical item or being.

Channel Divinity: Amplify Vibration (2nd Level)

Starting at 2nd level, you can use your Channel Divinity to manipulate the energy around you. As an action, you create a resonant pulse in a 30-foot radius around you for 1 minute.

- Resonant Pulse: All spell damage within this area increases by 1d6 thunder damage. Additionally, the next enemy to fail a saving throw within the pulse must succeed on a Constitution saving throw or become dazed (incapacitated until the end of its next turn).

- You can end the effect early as a bonus action.

Harmonic Surge (6th Level)

You can manipulate the flow of magic around you to increase its resonance. When you or an ally within 30 feet casts a spell, you can use your reaction to grant one of the following effects:

- Harmonic Boost: Add 1d8 thunder damage to the spell's effect.
- Resonant Echo: After the spell is cast, it echoes for a moment. If the target moves within the next turn, it takes 1d8 psychic damage as the energy reverberates.

You can use this feature a number of times equal to your Wisdom modifier (minimum of 1), and regain all uses after a long rest.

Divine Strike (8th Level)

At 8th level, you can infuse your attacks with the energy of sound waves. Once on each of your turns when you hit a creature with a weapon attack, you can deal an additional 1d8 thunder damage. When you reach 14th level, this extra damage increases to 2d8.

Cosmic Resonance (17th Level)

At 17th level, your connection to magical resonance allows you to maintain harmony—or disrupt it—with overwhelming power. You gain the following abilities:

- Resonant Field: As an action, you create a 60-foot-radius sphere centered on yourself that lasts for 1 minute. While active, the field enhances magic:
- Allies' spell attacks and save DCs increase by 2.
- All enemies in the field have disadvantage on saving throws against thunder or psychic damage.
- Planar Feedback: If an enemy fails a saving throw inside the field, they become vulnerable to thunder damage until the end of your next turn.

You can use this feature once per long rest.

Roleplaying a Resonance Domain Cleric

Clerics of the Resonance Domain walk the fine line between stability and chaos. Some see themselves as protectors of harmony, ensuring that magic and natural energies flow in balance. Others revel in discord, believing that disruption is necessary for progress and change.

These clerics are often sought after in regions affected by the Weirding, as they are uniquely suited to stabilize (or harness) its influence. However, their affinity with chaotic energies sometimes makes them outsiders among other religious figures, who view their methods as too unpredictable.

When playing a Resonance Domain Cleric, consider:

- How do you view magic? Is it a gift to be carefully cultivated or a chaotic force to embrace?
- What role do you play in the Weirding? Do you seek to restore order to areas disrupted by the Weirding, or do you tap into the chaos to enhance your abilities?
- How do you interact with sound and music? Do you use instruments or singing to channel your divine magic, or do you listen to the hidden vibrations of the world to guide you?

Resonance Domain Clerics in Ryndor

In Ryndor, the Resonance Domain is associated with the subtle vibrations between the material and astral planes. These clerics are often connected to the Sev'rinn Council or specialized orders dedicated to stabilizing astral energy. Their abilities are highly sought after in the chaotic regions touched by The Weirding, where strange distortions in time and space require delicate manipulation.

Resonance Domain clerics are also deeply involved in musical and magical traditions, often participating in or leading rituals that blend faith with music. Some clerics even use their abilities to craft strange and beautiful instruments that echo with arcane power, leaving traces of music that linger in the air long after the performance ends.

Druid

Druid Class in Ryndor

"The land speaks, and I answer. The skies shift, and I change. The Weirding spreads, and I become the bridge."

Druids in Ryndor are the guardians of nature, but in a world shaped by the Weirding, they are more than just protectors of forests and fields—they are intermediaries between the natural and the unnatural. The strange influences that have emerged across the land challenge the very balance they have sworn to protect. As beings of both tradition and transformation, druids must adapt to the ever-changing nature of Ryndor. They embrace cycles—of life and death, magic and nature, and now, stability and chaos—seeking harmony amid the strange.

The Role of Druids in Ryndor

The druidic tradition in Ryndor stretches back to ancient times, predating the rise and fall of empires. Many druids act as shamans, guides, and advisors, respected for their wisdom and understanding of nature's cycles. However, the spread of the Weirding has unsettled them. Some druids resist these changes, trying to maintain the old ways, while others embrace the strangeness as part of nature's evolution.

Druids in Ryndor often serve as watchers of boundaries: between life and death, order and chaos, and material and astral realms. They interact with ancient forests, volcanic landscapes, hidden groves, and now, weird zones, understanding that balance must be found in transformation.

Druidic Traditions in Ryndor

- Ancient Guardians: Some druids uphold the oldest traditions, protecting ancient forests like Hurstwold or Arvanthwaite Woods. They are wary of the Weirding and seek to isolate these places from its influence.
- Wayfarers and Guides: These druids walk the wilds of Ryndor, helping travelers survive treacherous terrain and avoid strange phenomena. They understand that balance requires movement and change.

- Weird-Touched Mystics: A growing number of druids now study the Weirding's effects on natural phenomena. They explore strange groves and mutated ecosystems, seeking ways to harness the unpredictable forces of this new world.

Druids in Daily Life

Druids rarely reside within cities, preferring to live on the fringes of civilization or within natural sanctuaries. However, they are often welcomed as healers, herbalists, and wise advisers by rural communities. The people of Wyrmbost, for example, rely on druids to maintain the health of the beasts they breed. Druids also serve as mediators between settlements and the land itself, ensuring that communities respect natural cycles and avoid overexploiting resources.

In Eveltoft, druids play a quieter but essential role, ensuring that the city's interaction with the Weirding is carefully monitored. Some act as emissaries between the Crystal Scholars and the wilderness beyond, negotiating for harmony in a world shifting between order and chaos.

Themes for Druid Characters in Ryndor

- Guardians of the Old Ways: Does your character believe in protecting the ancient traditions, resisting the strangeness of the Weirding to maintain balance?
- Weird-Touched Wanderers: Does your druid explore the fringes of strange ecosystems, fascinated by the new creatures and phenomena that the Weirding has introduced?
- Advisors and Mediators: Do you serve as a spiritual guide or negotiator between communities, seeking to balance human ambition with the land's needs?
- Transformative Shapeshifters: How has your ability to transform and adapt been influenced by the Weirding? Have your forms changed in ways you do not yet understand?

Playing a Druid in Ryndor

As a druid in Ryndor, you bridge the gap between tradition and transformation. Whether you resist the Weirding or embrace it, you must navigate a world in flux. Your magic draws from the forces of nature, but those forces are no longer predictable. A druid of Ryndor is more than just a protector of nature; they are a guide through uncertainty, a weaver of cycles, and a witness to the strange evolution of the land.

Character Inspiration Questions

1. What is your relationship with the Weirding? Do you view it as a curse or an opportunity for growth?
2. What is your connection to nature's cycles? Are you a strict traditionalist, or do you believe in adapting to new influences?
3. How do you interact with other characters? Do you prefer solitude, or do you see yourself as a teacher and guide?
4. Where do you call home? Are you tied to a specific forest, mountain, or stretch of land, or do you wander in search of understanding?
5. What creatures do you revere or fear? How do you interact with the strange beasts introduced by the Weirding?

Circle of the Weird

Circle of the Weird

"The threads of the Weirding are tangled and frayed, and we are the ones who weave them anew."

Druids who join the Circle of the Weird embrace the chaotic and unstable energies that flow between the material and astral planes, drawn to the strange phenomena brought about by the Weirding. These druids believe that the natural world and the realms beyond are interconnected in ways that defy understanding, and they seek to uncover the secrets hidden within these blurred boundaries. As a member of the Circle of the Weird, you embody the unpredictable nature of the Weirding, using its chaotic influence to reshape the battlefield, adapt to bizarre forms, and reveal hidden truths that lie beneath reality's surface.

Features of the Circle of the Weird

Circle Spells

Your connection to the Weird grants you access to unique magic that pulls from strange planes of existence. At certain levels, you gain access to spells that reflect the chaotic influence of the Weirding.

Druid Level	Circle Spells
3rd	Mirror Image, Misty Step
5th	Blink, Hypnotic Pattern
7th	Greater Invisibility, Confusion
9th	Mislead, Passwall

These spells count as druid spells for you, and you always have them prepared.

Weird Shape

2nd-level Circle of the Weird feature

When you tap into your Wild Shape, your form fluctuates with the chaotic energies of the Weirding. As a bonus action, you can expend a use of your Wild Shape to assume the form of a Weirded Beast—a creature shaped by the unstable forces of the Weirding.

- While in your Wild Shape, your form becomes unpredictable and mutable. You may roll once on the Weird Shape Mutation table below at the start of each of your turns to determine a bonus or effect for that turn.

d6	Weird Shape Mutation
1	Your limbs stretch unnaturally—+10 ft. reach for melee attacks this turn.
2	Your body flickers—+2 AC as you momentarily phase out of reality.
3	Illusions swirl around you—enemies attacking you must succeed on a DC 13

Wisdom saving throw or have disadvantage. |

| 4 | You generate heat or frost—1d6 fire or cold damage to creatures that hit you with melee attacks. |

| 5 | Your senses sharpen—advantage on Perception checks until the start of your next turn. |

| 6 | Your voice twists—advantage on Intimidation checks and creatures that hear you speak take 1d6 psychic damage. |

This feature offers new and unpredictable utility with each transformation, making you a dynamic presence in combat.

Revelation of the Real

6th-level Circle of the Weird feature

You can cast Light at will, but when cast through this feature, the light reveals the true nature of creatures and objects affected by the Weirding.

- Creatures hidden by illusions, shapeshifting, or invisibility become briefly revealed within the light for 1 round.

- Objects disguised or enchanted appear as they truly are, granting you insights into curses, enchantments, or magical traps.

Additionally, when you concentrate on a spell that creates light (such as Daylight or Faerie Fire), creatures illuminated by the spell have disadvantage on saving throws against your druid spells.

Twist the Unseen

10th-level Circle of the Weird feature

The Weirding allows you to bend reality in unpredictable ways. When you use your Wild Shape, you may choose one of the following effects instead of assuming an animal form:

- Flicker Between: You shift between realities, gaining resistance to all damage and moving through creatures and objects as if they were difficult terrain. This effect lasts for 1 minute, or until you are incapacitated.

- Illusory Echo: You create an illusionary duplicate of yourself, which moves as you do. Creatures must succeed on an Intelligence saving throw (DC 15) to tell the difference between you and your echo. If they fail, they cannot target you directly until the start of your next turn.

Weird Manifestation

14th-level Circle of the Weird feature

At the height of your power, you can pull unstable forces directly from the astral rift into the material plane. As an action, you can unleash a Weird Manifestation that affects all creatures within a 30-foot radius centered on you. Choose two effects from the list below, or roll randomly:

| d8 | Weird Manifestation Effect |

|:--:|----------|

| 1 | Time slows—affected creatures cannot take reactions for 1 minute. |

| 2 | Gravity shifts—creatures within the area are either pushed 10 ft. away from you or pulled 10 ft. toward you (your choice). |

| 3 | Voices of unseen entities whisper—creatures must make a Wisdom save (DC 16) or be Frightened until the end of their next turn. |

| 4 | Colors invert—affected creatures have disadvantage on attack rolls for 1 minute. |

| 5 | The ground warps—difficult terrain spreads throughout the area for 1 minute. |

| 6 | Objects levitate—non-attended objects within the area float freely, up to 10 feet off the ground. |

| 7 | Healing anomaly—each creature in the area regains 2d8 hit points. |

| 8 | Ethereal surge—invisible creatures within the area are forced into visibility for 1 minute. |

Once you use this feature, you must finish a long rest before using it again.

Playing a Circle of the Weird Druid

The Circle of the Weird offers a blend of unpredictability, utility, and danger. As a member of this circle, your abilities reflect the chaos and transformation inherent in the Weirding. Your character might see themselves as a mediator between the natural and unnatural worlds, using chaos as a tool to heal or disrupt as needed.

Roleplaying Considerations

- How do you interpret the Weirding? Do you believe it is a blessing, a curse, or a puzzle to be solved?
- How does unpredictability shape your worldview? Do you embrace change, or struggle to control the forces you wield?
- What led you to the Circle of the Weird? Was it curiosity, necessity, or an encounter with a strange force you could not ignore?

Fighter

The Fighter Class in Ryndor

Fighters are the steadfast warriors of Ryndor, trained in the art of combat from a young age. Whether fighting on the ground, commanding an airship crew, or mastering ancient weapon techniques, Fighters bring skill, strategy, and strength to every battlefield. They are found in all corners of the land—guarding the cities, exploring the wilderness, or engaging in competitions of strength and prowess in the arena. Fighters in Ryndor are as diverse as the regions they come from, with their techniques shaped by the land, sky, and strange forces like The Weirding.

Warriors of Every Kind

Fighters in Ryndor adopt countless roles, from disciplined knights sworn to protect the realm, to bold adventurers carving their path through the unknown. Some serve as mercenaries or soldiers, while others become champions in the Kigan Uldar Games, where the most daring and skilled combatants compete for glory. Many Fighters also dedicate themselves to causes—whether defending communities from Weirded creatures, mastering ancient martial traditions, or unearthing the lost combat knowledge of Nebernoria.

The Weirding and Fighters

The Weirding has drastically altered both the landscape of Ryndor and the techniques of combat itself. Some Fighters have adapted to these strange changes, incorporating elements of Weirded environments into their tactics. Warriors who brave Weird Zones learn to expect the unexpected, mastering fast reactions and strange combat strategies to outlast supernatural effects. However, others are more cautious, relying on tradition and discipline to remain grounded amidst the chaos.

In this new age, even the most skilled Fighters must stay alert—every battlefield may shift beneath their feet, and every opponent could harbor unforeseen dangers..

Role in the World

Fighters play an essential role in Ryndor's society. In Eveltoft, they serve as guards, soldiers, and gladiators in the city's many competitions. In more rural regions, Fighters act as protectors, defending towns and villages from marauding beasts or rival factions. Ban Mynydd's deep mines rely on Fighters to clear out dangerous creatures lurking underground, while airship crews value skilled Fighters to fend off airborne raiders. Those Fighters who venture into the Weirded wilderness face immense danger but often return with stories and treasures beyond imagining.

Fighters are also key figures in the Kigan Uldar and Utfordring competitions. Their mastery of weaponry and tactics makes them crowd favorites, and many seek fame and fortune through victory in these grand events. However, with the Weirding creeping into more parts of the world, Fighters are finding their skills tested in ways they never expected.

Fighters in Society

Each culture within Ryndor views Fighters differently. Some regions treat them as noble defenders, while others see them as mere mercenaries-for-hire. In Eveltoft, Fighters trained in the Heibury District are respected for their discipline, while the warriors of Ban Mynydd carry the weight of tradition. Many rural Fighters serve as both hunters and defenders, protecting their homes from wild beasts and strange threats.

In Ryndor's ever-shifting power dynamics, Fighters may align with different factions—mercenary guilds, royal armies, or shadowy organizations. Some use their skills to protect the realm, while others pursue personal gain or follow their own moral code. Regardless of their allegiance, Fighters are always at the forefront of conflict, ready to face whatever challenges the world throws their way.

Creating a Fighter in Ryndor

When creating a Fighter in Ryndor, consider where your character learned their craft. Were they trained by a formal academy, like those in the Heibury District, or did they learn their skills through hardship and survival in the wilderness? Did your Fighter compete in the Kigan Uldar Games, or do they dream of commanding an airship as a Skybound Captain? Perhaps your Fighter has adapted to life within a Weirded zone, learning to fight in strange and unpredictable conditions.

Questions to Consider:

- What motivates your Fighter? Honor, wealth, revenge, or something else?
- Does your Fighter embrace tradition, or are they an innovator on the battlefield?
- How has the Weirding impacted your Fighter's journey? Do they fear it, or have they adapted to thrive within it?

Skybound Captain

Skybound Captain

A Fighter Archetype for DnD 5e

"The skies do not forgive the careless. To command an airship is to command fate itself."

Skybound Captains are tactical masters of both combat and airship command. These fighters are experts at maneuvering through unstable environments, making lightning-fast decisions, and inspiring their crew to greatness. Whether serving as daring explorers, military officers, or even cunning sky-pirates, they thrive in the chaos of aerial combat, blending leadership, agility, and strength.

Skybound Captain Features

Airship Command

When you choose this archetype at 3rd level, you become proficient in navigator's tools and vehicles (air) if you do not already have them. Your experience as a captain gives you tactical insight and battlefield leadership.

- Sky Orders: As a bonus action, you can give a tactical order to an ally within 30 feet of you who can hear you. That ally gains advantage on the next attack roll, ability check, or saving throw they make before the start of your next turn. You can use this ability a number of times equal to your proficiency bonus, regaining all expended uses after a long rest.

Master of the Skies

At 3rd level, you excel in unstable environments like airships or moving platforms. You gain the following benefits:

- Steady Ground: You have advantage on saving throws to avoid being knocked prone or moved against your will while on a moving surface or in flight.
- Acrobatic Proficiency: You gain proficiency in Acrobatics, or if you already have it, you gain expertise (doubling your proficiency bonus for Acrobatics checks).

7th Level: Windborne Maneuvering

You move with precision, striking while on the move.

- When you take the Dash action, you can make one melee or ranged weapon attack as part of that action.
- You ignore non-magical difficult terrain, and you can move through the space of friendly creatures during your turn without expending extra movement.

10th Level: Captain's Aura

Your command presence bolsters your allies. You project an aura of leadership in a 10-foot radius around you. While in this aura:

- Allies add your proficiency bonus to initiative rolls.
- Allies operating vehicles (air or water) add your proficiency bonus to skill checks related to navigation or control.

This aura expands to 30 feet at 18th level.

15th Level: Eye of the Storm

You thrive in chaos, always finding opportunity in adversity.

- When you roll initiative, you can swap your initiative result with that of a willing ally within 30 feet.
- If an ally within 10 feet of you must make a saving throw, you can use your reaction to grant them advantage on that saving throw.

18th Level: Stormlord's Wrath

At the height of your mastery, you channel the power of the storm and command both ship and crew with unparalleled skill.

- Once per long rest, you can summon an electrical storm to rage around your airship or platform, lasting for 1 minute. During the storm:
- Enemy creatures have disadvantage on ranged attacks against your crew.
- All movement speed for your airship or platform increases by 10 feet.
- You and your allies within 30 feet deal an extra 2d8 lightning or thunder damage on one weapon attack per turn.

Additionally, while aboard an airship, you and your allies within 30 feet gain resistance to lightning and thunder damage.

Roleplaying the Skybound Captain

Skybound Captains are natural leaders with experience navigating perilous skies. Whether you are an honorable officer, a fearless pirate, or an independent adventurer, your tactical abilities and airship expertise are central to your story. These captains can take on diverse roles, from fleet commanders defending against aerial threats to explorers charting new frontiers in Ryndor's skies, including the Weirded zones.

Skybound Captain Combat Tactics

- Use Sky Orders strategically to give allies the edge in critical moments.
- Take advantage of Windborne Maneuvering to stay mobile, strike effectively, and escape difficult situations.
- In larger battles, your Captain's Aura ensures your party strikes fast and navigates hazardous encounters with ease.
- When facing overwhelming odds, Eye of the Storm can rearrange initiative and turn the tide in your favor.
- Stormlord's Wrath can devastate your enemies with lightning-imbued attacks, while enhancing your ship's speed and defense.

Monk

Monk Class in Ryndor

Introduction

The Monks of Ryndor are disciplined warriors who channel both the physical and metaphysical into perfect harmony. Drawing from traditions rooted in elemental balance and the philosophical ideals of ancient practitioners, Ryndorian Monks seek inner enlightenment while mastering the energy around them. Some Monks live in isolated sanctuaries, perfecting their craft far from civilization, while others wander the land, seeking to balance forces thrown into disarray by the Weirding.

Monastic Traditions

Monks in Ryndor are shaped by their origins and the focus of their training. While they all possess extraordinary martial prowess, each monk tradition specializes in a different path, blending combat with unique spiritual or elemental disciplines. From mountain sanctuaries to bustling districts of Eveltoft, these traditions thrive, connecting body, mind, and the shifting energies of the land.

Elemental Influence

The Weirding has left its mark on many of the monasteries of Ryndor. Monks attuned to these new energies develop unique abilities tied to specific elemental principles—such as water's flow, earth's resilience, or time's subtle shifts. This infusion of strange energies enhances their martial arts, allowing them to manipulate the environment and wield powerful ki techniques in unexpected ways.

Life as a Monk

Monks in Ryndor can be found meditating in ancient sanctuaries, serving as wandering sages, or even acting as protectors for communities plagued by instability. Many Monks embrace simple living, wearing garments reflecting both ancient traditions and practical modern adaptations—often inspired by the Norse-Chinese blend that permeates Ryndorian fashion. Their clothing incorporates wraps, loose robes, and intricate knot patterns, sometimes marked with subtle glyphs representing the flow of ki.

Unique Monastic Orders

Monasteries across Ryndor have developed distinct philosophies and techniques to adapt to the challenges of the land and the Weirding. Some focus on elemental balance, integrating the natural forces into their martial discipline, while others delve into metaphysical arts, harnessing the strange energies of time or space to enhance their agility or insight. Here are some examples of orders you may encounter:

- Order of the Flowing Tide: Monks of this order embody fluidity, adopting water's adaptability to avoid harm and strike with precision.
- Order of the Stalwart Stone: Focused on resilience, these monks absorb punishment and redirect force like immovable stone.
- Order of the Shattered Hourglass: These monks explore temporal shifts, using strange time-based ki techniques to strike faster than the eye can follow.

· Order of the Empty Sky: Masters of air and space, they leap vast distances and control their environment with astounding grace.

Monks and the Weirding

The Weirding has led some monks to unlock abilities thought impossible—such as phasing through solid walls or slowing an opponent's perception of time. These powers often come at a price, as monks walk the delicate line between balance and chaos. While they attempt to master the Weirding's influence through meditation and discipline, not all survive the mental strain of dealing with this unpredictable force.

Role in Ryndor

Monks serve diverse roles throughout Ryndor, acting as mediators, explorers, warriors, and sages. Many find themselves drawn to places affected by the Weirding, seeking to restore balance or unravel mysteries. Some offer guidance to those lost in spiritual turmoil, while others use their skills to combat supernatural threats emerging from the Rift to Nebernoria. The versatility and wisdom of Ryndorian monks make them invaluable allies in any adventuring party, and their pursuit of mastery ensures they are always evolving.

Way of Shifting Powers

Way of Shifting Powers

Monks who follow the Way of Shifting Powers learn to channel and manipulate the volatile resonance that flows through Ryndor. These monks see themselves as vessels for elemental energy, allowing it to ebb and flow through them. Practitioners master how to adapt their techniques in harmony with shifting resonances—whether tapping into fire's destructive surge or the calm, healing energy of water. They focus not on control, but on embracing change, riding the currents of magic that permeate the world.

Features of the Way of Shifting Powers

3rd Level: Resonant Strike

When you make an unarmed strike, you can infuse it with shifting resonance. Choose an energy type (fire, cold, thunder, or radiant) when you strike. Your attack deals an additional 1d6 damage of the chosen type. You can change the energy type each time you hit with an unarmed strike.

6th Level: Flux Step

You can tap into the unstable energies of Ryndor to teleport short distances. As a bonus action, spend 1 Ki point to teleport up to 20 feet to a location you can see. When you reappear, creatures within 5 feet of you must succeed on a Dexterity saving throw (DC equal to 8 + your proficiency bonus + your Wisdom modifier) or take 2d6 force damage as a burst of energy surges around you.

11th Level: Elemental Confluence

At the start of each of your turns, you attune yourself to a different elemental resonance: fire, air, water, or earth. Depending on your attunement, you gain the following benefits:

- Fire: Your attacks ignite enemies, dealing an additional 1d8 fire damage.
- Air: You gain advantage on Dexterity (Acrobatics) checks and can move an extra 10 feet.
- Water: You can heal yourself or an ally within 10 feet for 1d8 HP as a bonus action.
- Earth: You gain temporary hit points equal to your Wisdom modifier at the start of your turn.

You can change your attunement at the start of each of your turns without spending an action.

17th Level: Avatar of Resonance

You unleash the full force of resonance within you. As an action, spend 5 Ki points to enter a state of perfect harmony with the elements for 1 minute. While in this state:

- You gain resistance to all damage types except psychic.
- Each time you take the Attack action, you can switch your elemental resonance mid-attack, gaining the benefits of different elements for each hit.
- You can teleport up to 30 feet as a bonus action, leaving a blast of energy in your wake that deals 3d8 force damage to creatures within 5 feet.

You can use this ability once per long rest.

The Way of Shifting Powers emphasizes adaptability and magical resonance, blending the physical prowess of monks with the elemental forces of Ryndor. These monks are agents of change, flowing with power that reflects the unstable, shifting energies of the Weirding, giving them a unique role both on and off the battlefield.

Paladin

The Paladin in Ryndor

Paladins in Ryndor are champions of conviction, wielding magic through their sheer force of belief. Whether pledging themselves to gods, ideals, or cosmic forces, they are defenders of justice, hope, and order in a land often twisted by the Weirding's chaotic influence. These warriors exemplify the duality of power—righteous protectors or dangerous zealots—depending on the oaths they swear and the causes they uphold.

Paladins and the Weirding

The nature of a Paladin's oath is particularly vulnerable to the Weirding. A broken oath can corrupt a Paladin's powers, twisting them into a perversion of their original ideals. Some Paladins embrace these changes, believing the Weirding is a test of their resolve, while others struggle against the transformations within. Weirded oaths lead to strange powers—blessings altered in unforeseen ways or auras that shift unpredictably.

The Role of Paladins in Ryndor's Struggles

In a realm torn by ambition, elemental shifts, and astral rifts, Paladins are often more than just fighters. They serve as arbiters, emissaries, and warriors of faith, safeguarding the balance between order and chaos. Many have become leaders in Eveltoft and Ban Mynydd, standing as symbols of hope or as feared enforcers of harsh justice. Paladins also find themselves as mediators between mortals and strange beings from Nebernoria, using their divine magic to negotiate or protect.

Oaths in Ryndor

The choice of oath is deeply personal in Ryndor. Some Paladins swear Oaths of Redemption, seeking to heal the land ravaged by the Weirding, while others pursue Oaths of the Vanguard, vowing to guard Ryndor against Nebernoria's creeping influence. Unique oaths tied to the land's elemental magic or to the enigmatic Custodians of Prosperity have also emerged, influencing how Paladins interact with the world and their powers.

Auras of Stability

The Paladin's aura magic is highly sought after, particularly in regions heavily affected by the Weirding. These auras can provide sanctuaries from chaotic shifts, anchoring reality for allies. Some orders train Paladins specifically to patrol unstable zones, offering respite for the people struggling with strange phenomena.

Champions of Ideal and Cause

Paladins are found throughout Ryndor, aligned with cities, councils, or elemental orders. Some follow ancient codes rooted in the lore of Ban Mynydd, while others swear modern oaths to protect Eveltoft and its people from emerging threats. Whether as wandering knights or leaders of powerful sects, these Paladins channel the divine or cosmic resonance to shape the future of the land.

Oath of Resonance

Oath of Resonance

Paladins who swear the Oath of Resonance pledge themselves to maintain the delicate harmony between the forces of Ryndor. Whether it's balancing elemental magic, protecting the stability of reality from the Weirding, or acting as a bridge between opposing ideals, these Paladins serve as guardians of equilibrium. They are warriors of alignment—working not to impose rigid order or chaos but to preserve the balance that keeps the world whole.

Tenets of Resonance

Paladins who follow this path live by the following principles:

· Balance in All Things: Recognize that both light and shadow, creation and destruction, have their place in the world. Maintain the balance.

· Resonance with Others: Seek to understand others' beliefs and actions, even when they seem opposed. Harmony can only be achieved through empathy.

· Ward Against the Unnatural: Protect the world from forces that would distort it—especially those from Nebernoria or unstable Weirding zones.

· Flow Like Water, Stand Like Stone: Be adaptable in times of change, yet immovable in your values when faced with corruption or imbalance.

Oath Spells
Starting at 3rd level, you gain the following oath spells:

Level Spells
3rd Detect Magic, Sanctuary
5th Calm Emotions, Warding Bond
9th Dispel Magic, Protection from Energy
13th Aura of Purity, Guardian of Nature
17th Wall of Force, Greater Restoration

Channel Divinity
At 3rd level, you gain the following Channel Divinity options:
• Resonant Strike: As a bonus action, infuse your weapon with elemental energy. On your next hit, choose a damage type (fire, cold, lightning, or radiant) to deal an additional 2d10 damage and push the target 10 feet away.
• Field of Alignment: As an action, create an aura within 10 feet of you for 1 minute. While inside, creatures can reroll saving throws against effects that impose conditions (such as fear or charm).

Aura of Equilibrium (7th level)
You radiate an aura that calms chaotic forces. Within 10 feet of you, any time a creature rolls with advantage or disadvantage, they treat both rolls as equal to the higher of the two values. At 18th level, the range of this aura increases to 30 feet.

Resonant Reflection (15th level)
When targeted by an elemental effect (fire, cold, lightning, etc.), you can use your reaction to absorb the energy. You take half damage, and the next melee attack you make within 1 minute deals the absorbed damage type as extra damage.

Avatar of Balance (20th level)
As an action, you can become a beacon of cosmic harmony for 1 minute. While in this form:
• You gain resistance to all damage.
• Creatures within 30 feet of you cannot have advantage or disadvantage.
• You can change the damage type of any attack you make to one of the following: fire, cold, radiant, or necrotic.
Once you use this feature, you can't do so again until you finish a long rest.

Oath of Discord

Oath of Discord
The Oath of Discord attracts Paladins who revel in chaos, destruction, and the unraveling of societal or cosmic harmony. These paladins reject balance and order, embracing entropy as the true state of existence. Whether seeking power through destruction or serving a malevolent force, Paladins of Discord sow conflict wherever they go, uniting only to tear down the status quo.

Tenets of Discord

These paladins thrive in chaos and follow these principles:

· Spread Chaos: Instability is power. Disrupt any force that seeks control or harmony.

· Foster Betrayal: Trust is a weakness; manipulate others to turn on each other for your benefit.

Oath Spells

At 3rd level, you gain access to the following spells:

Level Spells

3rd Cause Fear, Bane
5th Crown of Madness, Shatter
9th Bestow Curse, Fear
13th Greater Invisibility, Confusion
17th Cloudkill, Dominate Person

Channel Divinity

When you take this oath at 3rd level, you gain the following Channel Divinity options:

· Agony's Touch: As a bonus action, curse a creature you can see within 30 feet. For 1 minute, they take an additional 1d8 necrotic damage whenever they take damage.

· Seed of Discord: As an action, choose two creatures within 30 feet. They must succeed on a Wisdom saving throw or be compelled to attack one another for 1 minute, as if under the compelled duel spell.

Aura of Strife (7th level)

Your presence fuels conflict. Creatures within 10 feet of you cannot benefit from temporary hit points, and whenever a creature in the aura makes a melee attack, it deals extra damage equal to your Charisma modifier (minimum of +1). The aura increases to 30 feet at 18th level.

Harbinger of Betrayal (15th level)

You gain resistance to psychic damage, and you can use your reaction when an ally within 10 feet of you makes a saving throw. The ally automatically fails the saving throw, and you gain 2d8 temporary hit points.

Avatar of Chaos (20th level)

As an action, you can awaken the full power of discord within you for 1 minute. While in this state:

• Creatures within 30 feet of you have disadvantage on saving throws.

• Whenever a creature takes damage within your aura, another creature of your choice within range also takes half that damage.

• Once per turn, when you hit with a weapon attack, the target becomes frightened until the end of your next turn.

After using this feature, you cannot do so again until you finish a long rest.

The Oath of Discord paladins live for conflict, wielding chaos as both weapon and shield. They leave ruin in their wake, reveling in betrayal and thriving in the crumbling remains of peace.

Ranger

Ranger Class in Ryndor

In the vast and unpredictable landscape of Ryndor, Rangers stand as masters of survival, navigation, and reconnaissance. They are adept at thriving in both the untamed wilderness and urban sprawl, moving with quiet precision through dense forests, shifting sand dunes, and bustling markets. Rangers in Ryndor blend ancient traditions with new techniques—many learn the ways of both elemental resonance and primal intuition, making them uniquely attuned to the Weirding that affects the land.

Themes of the Ranger Class in Ryndor

• Guardians of the Frontier: Rangers serve as scouts, trackers, and protectors, often patrolling dangerous borders or maintaining the safety of remote settlements. Whether guarding the trade routes of Surreymouth or the dense Hurstwold Forest, they are always on the move.

• The Resonance of Nature: Many Rangers develop a strange attunement to the elements of Ryndor. They can sense shifts in weather patterns, the strange pulses of Weirded zones, and track the subtle flow of life in regions affected by elemental resonance.

• Wanderers and Guides: Rangers rarely stay in one place for long. Their journeys through the wildlands or the decaying remnants of ancient cities make them invaluable guides, often employed by scholars, merchants, and adventurers alike.

Subcultures and Regional Roles

• The Greenhearts of Hurstwold: These Rangers are deeply in tune with nature's primal forces, making them exceptional trackers and guardians of wildlife.

• Voidstriders of Ban Mynydd: Masters of stealth and exploration, these Rangers navigate dangerous mines, Weird zones, and dimensional rifts to scout for threats and ancient artifacts.

• Seawatchers of Surreymouth: Coastal Rangers who patrol the shores and trade routes. They specialize in managing maritime dangers like storms and sea monsters.

The Ranger and the Weirding

The Weirding presents a unique challenge—and opportunity—for Rangers. Some develop strange abilities from exposure to Weirded zones, granting them limited powers of foresight or the ability to sense hidden pathways. Others choose to guard the land from the harmful influence of the Weirding, hunting down dangerous anomalies that threaten Ryndor's fragile balance.

Archetypes Unique to Ryndor

· Echo Wardens: Rangers who track resonant anomalies caused by the Weirding, wielding elemental forces in subtle ways.

· Lantern Guides: Operating primarily in Eveltoft, these Rangers specialize in urban navigation, using the lights of enchanted lanterns to reveal hidden pathways and creatures.

Rangers in Ryndor embody resilience, adaptability, and loyalty to their chosen path. Whether traversing ancient ruins or standing guard against unseen forces, they are the first line of defense—and often the last hope—against the ever-shifting dangers of the Weirded Lands.

Arcane Mechanist

Ranger Archetype: Arcane Mechanist

The Arcane Mechanist is a Ranger who merges nature's mastery with the technological ingenuity of Ryndor. These Rangers are experts in using and maintaining the realm's advanced tools, airships, and mechanical companions. Rather than drawing power solely from primal forces, the Arcane Mechanist taps into technology to enhance their abilities, making them invaluable guides, scouts, and saboteurs. Whether calibrating intricate gadgets or adapting machinery to strange environments, these Rangers are masters of innovation and resourcefulness.

Arcane Mechanist Features

3rd Level: Tinker's Tools & Tech Sense

You gain proficiency with Tinker's Tools. Additionally, you develop a sixth sense for machinery and arcane devices. As an action, you can detect magical or technological traps, contraptions, and energy sources within 60 feet. You can also identify how to disable or manipulate them with a successful Intelligence (Investigation) check.

3rd Level: Mechanical Companion

You build a mechanical companion, a small automaton (choose a form: bird, spider, or fox). Your companion acts on your turn and can use the Help action or deliver a simple ranged attack (1d6 piercing damage, range 30/60 ft). If it is destroyed, you can repair it over a short or long rest.

7th Level: Deployable Devices

You invent small gadgets to aid in exploration and combat. You can prepare two devices each day, choosing from the following:

- Smoke Bomb: Creates a 10-foot-radius cloud of smoke for 1 minute. All creatures inside are heavily obscured.
- Shock Dart: Launches a small projectile. On a hit, the target takes 2d8 lightning damage and can't take reactions until the start of its next turn.
- Spring Trap: Sets a hidden mechanical trap that deals 2d6 piercing damage and restrains the first creature to trigger it (Strength save to escape).

11th Level: Overclock

You push your devices beyond their intended limits. Once per short or long rest, you can activate Overclock Mode. For 1 minute, your mechanical companion gains an additional action per turn and advantage on all attack rolls. Additionally, you can use two deployable devices as a bonus action during Overclock.

15th Level: Arcane Infusion

Your understanding of technology allows you to imbue magic into your inventions. You can now store a spell of 3rd level or lower into your mechanical companion or any deployable device. Once the spell is triggered (such as when the trap activates or the companion attacks), the stored spell takes effect. You regain the use of this ability after a long rest.

The Arcane Mechanist thrives in Ryndor's technologically advanced landscapes, making them essential allies on airships, within arcane laboratories, and when navigating Weirded zones. With an arsenal of gadgets and a mechanical companion by their side, they harness both nature and technology in perfect harmony.

Rogue

Rogue Class in Ryndor

In Ryndor, Rogues are not merely thieves and tricksters; they are adaptive survivors, master infiltrators, and cunning strategists. The evolving complexities of the Weirding have only sharpened their talents. Rogues serve as spies, treasure hunters, black market operators, and saboteurs, blending stealth, wit, and an innate ability to manipulate environments—whether in a bustling city or Weirded wilderness. They are the ones who find opportunities where others see barriers, navigating dangerous trade routes, crime networks, and political intrigue with unmatched expertise.

Masters of Deception and Strategy

Rogues thrive within Ryndor's labyrinthine politics and dangerous trade networks. They may operate behind the scenes in Surreymouth's black market, gather intelligence on behalf of Eveltoft's Crystal Scholars, or serve as elite operatives hired by the Custodians of Prosperity. From the back alleys of Gullborg to the untamed depths of the Weirded Hurstwold Forest, these agents are everywhere, unseen but always watching. Their subtle manipulation of events makes them invaluable, though many question their loyalty.

Stealth in the Weirded Lands

The unpredictable forces of the Weirding provide both challenge and opportunity for Rogues. With a knack for improvisation, they exploit the strange physics and hidden pathways caused by Weird Zones. Many Rogues have perfected the art of blending their skills with the weirding's unpredictable effects, mastering the ability to vanish from sight or slip through dimensional gaps.

Whether avoiding the scrutiny of the Keepers of the Rift, smuggling Weirded artifacts from Nebernoria, or deceiving magical creatures drawn to the Rift's strange energy, Rogues in Ryndor have learned to thrive in a world where nothing is certain, and everything can be used to their advantage.

Subtle Yet Deadly

The Rogue's toolkit includes stealth, lockpicking, sleight of hand, and the ability to read people and situations at a glance. They rely on finesse over brute strength, using poison-tipped blades, hidden weapons, and traps. In the Weirded Lands, Rogues favor mundane objects imbued with strange quirks—items whose effects are unpredictable but highly effective in the right hands.

The Rogue class embodies the unpredictable nature of Ryndor itself—always adaptable, always two steps ahead. These agents, thieves, and tricksters may serve noble or selfish causes, but in a world ruled by uncertainty, they are the ones best equipped to thrive.

Riftstalker

Riftstalker

Archetype Overview:

Riftstalkers are Rogues who have mastered the art of moving between dimensions, exploiting strange anomalies and spatial quirks caused by the Weirding. These nimble operatives thrive in areas destabilized by the Rift to Nebernoria, slipping through folds in space, vanishing at a moment's notice, and reappearing where they are least expected. Whether acting as smugglers, spies, or covert agents, Riftstalkers bend space to their advantage, becoming elusive hunters in a world filled with instability.

Features of the Riftstalker Archetype

3rd Level – Dimensional Step:

You learn to momentarily shift between spaces. As a bonus action, you can teleport up to 15 feet to an unoccupied space you can see. This ability can be used a number of times equal to your proficiency bonus per long rest.

9th Level – Anomaly Sense:

You develop an instinct for detecting disturbances in space. You have advantage on Perception (Wisdom) and Investigation (Intelligence) checks to detect hidden portals, dimensional anomalies, or creatures affected by spatial magic.

13th Level – Rift Ambush:

After using your Dimensional Step, you can add your sneak attack damage even if you don't meet the usual conditions, as long as you appear adjacent to your target.

17th Level – Fractured Self:

You can summon alternate versions of yourself from nearby timelines. As an action, you create 1d4 illusory duplicates that last for 1 minute. These duplicates mimic your movements, imposing disadvantage on all attack rolls targeting you.

The Riftstalker Rogue embodies the unpredictability of the Weirding and the dangers lurking between realms. Whether working as a treasure hunter or shadowy operative, they are the masters of the unseen paths, always one step ahead—or several steps away—when trouble finds them.

Sev'rinn

UNDER CONSTRUCTION

Still needed:

- Figure out the elemental charge rules as per the shift ability
- Figure out multi-classing to other attunements
- Build an example PC for each attunement - add to "Faces and the Souls Within"

Sev'rinn: Elemental Warriors of Ryndor

Class Overview

The Sev'rinn are not mere spellcasters; they are living conduits of elemental power, capable of summoning the primal forces of nature in the heat of battle. Elemental mastery is woven into their identity—whether they conjure fire to engulf their weapons, invoke gusts of wind to evade attacks, or summon stone armor mid-battle. A Sev'rinn commands elemental magic with instinct rather than study, adapting moment by moment to the demands of combat. However, every spark of power drawn from the elements risks opening a doorway to the Weirding, a chaotic influence that changes the battlefield in unpredictable ways.

Sev'rinn use Elemental Techniques—swift invocations and battle actions powered by Elemental Charges, rather than traditional spell slots. These warriors blur the line between martial combatants and arcane masters, making them a force to be reckoned with on the battlefield.

Class Features Summary

| Level | Features | Elemental Charges | Techniques Known | Weirding Surge DC |

|---|---|---|---|---|

1st	Elemental Attunement, Combat Techniques	2	3	10
2nd	Elemental Shift, Weirding Surge	3	4	11
3rd	Comabt Technique	3	4	11

5th	Channel Power	4	6	12
7th	Combat Technique	4	6	12
9th	Resonant Flow	5	8	14
10th	Combat Technique	5	8	14
13th	Weirding Infusion	6	9	15
17th	Elemental Avatar	8	10	17

Core Class Features
Hit Points
- Hit Dice: 1d10 per Sev'rinn level
- Hit Points at 1st Level: 10 + Constitution modifier
- Hit Points at Higher Levels: 1d10 + Constitution modifier per Sev'rinn level
Proficiencies
- Armor: Light armor, medium armor
- Weapons: Simple weapons, martial weapons
- Tools: None
- Saving Throws: Constitution, Wisdom
- Skills: Choose two from Arcana, Athletics, Nature, Perception, and Survival

1st Level: Elemental Attunement

At 1st level, you attune yourself to one of five elemental forces—Fire, Water, Air, Stone, Nature, Light or Soul—which grants unique effects that enhance your combat prowess. Your Attunement also determines the bonus effect when you use certain Techniques. You can choose the benefits of a new attunement with each new level of Sev'rinn. For example, your first level of Tideborn, you can choose from the Tideborn combat techniques. At your second character level, you choose to take a level in Emberclad. You would choose from the Emberclad combat techniques, since it's your first level in Emberclad.

1st Level: Combat Techniques

You learn three Elemental Techniques at 1st level from the Sev'rinn technique list. You can use a Technique by spending 1 Elemental Charge. Techniques are bonus actions or reactions, making them ideal for battle. You regain all spent Charges at the end of a short or long rest.

3rd Level: Elemental Shift

At 2nd level, Sev'rinn gain the ability to tap into the raw, transformative power of their elemental attunement through Elemental Shift. This power enables them to embody the essence of their chosen element temporarily, gaining dynamic benefits that change as the shift progresses.

Activation

- Action:
- You activate
- Elemental Shift

- as a
- bonus action
- .
- Duration:
- The shift lasts for
- 1 minute
- or until you end it as a
- free action
- on your turn.
- Uses:
- You can use
- Elemental Shift
- a number of times equal to your
- proficiency bonus
- . All expended uses are restored when you complete a
- long rest

Choosing an Elemental Effect

Once Elemental Shift is active, you can either roll 1d6 or choose one effect from the Elemental Shift Tablecorresponding to your attunement.

- Rolling:
- If you roll at the start of your shift, you receive the effect indicated by the dice roll, which applies immediately.
- Locking:
- Alternatively, at the time of activation, you may lock in one of the six effects listed in your Elemental Shift Table. If locked, the effect does not change for the shift's full duration.

Changing the Elemental Effect

- At the
- start of each of your turns
- , you can choose to:
  - Roll the
  - 1d6
  - again to determine a new effect for the remainder of that turn.
  - Maintain the effect from the previous turn without re-rolling.
- If you roll,
- the new effect overrides the previous one until the start of your next turn or another roll.

2nd Level: Weirding Surge

Whenever you use a Combat Technique, roll a d20. On a natural 1, a Weirding Surge occurs. Weirding Surges cause strange and chaotic effects to manifest, warping reality around you. The DC to resist or control the Surge increases as you level.

Weirding Surge Table (Roll 1d6):

d6	Weirding Effect
1	A rift briefly opens, summoning a random creature for 1 minute.
2	Gravity reverses in a 10-foot radius around you for 1 round.
3	A harmless glowing orb follows you for the next 10 minutes.
4	The terrain around you shifts, creating difficult terrain for 1 round.
5	Your voice echoes unnaturally, imposing disadvantage on Charisma checks.
6	Time flickers—your next action repeats itself automatically.

5th Level: Channel Power

At 5th level, you unlock the ability to unleash powerful elemental bursts tied to your current Attunement. As an action, you can spend 2 Elemental Charges to activate one of the following bursts:

· Fire (Emberclad): Release a 20-foot cone of flame. Creatures within the area must make a Dexterity saving throw or take 6d8 fire damage (half on success).

· Air (Voidstrider): Create a powerful gust that pushes creatures within 15 feet back (Strength save to resist).

· Nature (Greenheart): Vines erupt in a 15-foot radius, restraining enemies (Strength save to escape).

· Time (Chronomancer): You and one ally within 30 feet take an additional action on your next turn.

· Soul (Eidolon): Reduce the movement speed of creatures within 20 feet by half for 1 minute (Wisdom save ends).

· Light (Luminor): Unleash a burst of radiant energy. Creatures within 15 feet must succeed on a Constitution saving throw or be blinded for 1 minute (repeat save at the end of each turn).

9th Level: Resonant Flow

At 9th level, you become adept at maintaining a steady flow of elemental energy. Once per turn, when you spend an Elemental Charge, you can immediately regain 1 Charge by rolling a natural 18-20 on an attack or ability check.

17th Level: Elemental Avatar

At 17th level, you can fully embody an elemental force. For 1 minute, you gain resistance to all damage and can change your Attunement at the start of each turn without using a charge. Once you use this feature, you can't do so again until you finish a long rest.

Tideborn

Water Attunement Techniques – The Tideborn

Water attunement flows with adaptability, patience, and relentless force. As a Tideborn, you embody the essence of the tides: gentle and nurturing one moment, overwhelming and unstoppable the next. Your techniques control the battlefield, heal allies, and manipulate the environment through currents, mists, and frost.

Elemental Shift: Water Attunement – Shift Table

When you activate your Elemental Shift ability to Tideborn, you channel the fluid and adaptable power of water, transforming yourself into a being of aquatic force. Roll 1d6 and consult the table below to determine the shift's effect. You can roll each turn that the shift is active or choose to lock in a specific effect for its duration.

d6	Shift Effect
1	Tidal Surge – Your movement increases by 15 feet, and you can move through enemy spaces without provoking opportunity attacks. You leave behind a slippery trail, making the spaces you exit difficult terrain for enemies.
2	Riptide Grasp – When you hit a creature with a melee weapon attack, you can pull it 10 feet toward you. If the creature fails a Strength saving throw (DC 8 + your proficiency bonus + Wisdom modifier), it is knocked prone.
3	Mistform Cloak – Your form becomes partially insubstantial. You have resistance to non-magical weapon damage, and attacks made against you from more than 10 feet away are made with disadvantage.
4	Icy Flow – At the start of each of your turns, you create a sheet of ice beneath your feet, spreading in a 10-foot radius. The ice persists for 1 minute, turning the area into difficult terrain for all creatures except you and allies. Enemies that move through it must succeed on a Dexterity saving throw or fall prone.
5	Healing Current – At the start of each of your turns, an ally within 15 feet regains hit points equal to 1d8 + your Wisdom modifier. If no allies are within range, you instead gain temporary hit points equal to your Wisdom modifier.
6	Crashing Blow – Your melee weapon attacks crash with the force of a wave. When you hit a creature with a weapon attack, you can deal an additional 1d10 bludgeoning damage and push the creature 10 feet back.

Description of Shift Effects

- Tidal Surge: Water grants fluidity, allowing you to weave through enemies and disrupt their footing.
- Riptide Grasp: The power of riptides pulls enemies to you, disorienting them and giving you the advantage.
- Mistform Cloak: Just as mist evades touch, you become elusive and harder to harm.
- Icy Flow: The chilling force of water forms ice at your feet, turning the battlefield into a trap for your foes.
- Healing Current: Water's nurturing side flows through you, empowering you or your allies to recover from injuries.

- Crashing Blow: The might of crashing waves flows through your strikes, making each hit a powerful impact that knocks enemies off-balance.

This table brings versatility to the Water Attunement's Elemental Shift ability, emphasizing its dual nature: both fluid and crushing, nurturing and relentless.

1st Level Techniques

Misty Veil

Effect: You conjure a light mist around a target area (10 ft. radius) for up to 1 minute. While in the mist, creatures have partial cover and disadvantage on ranged attack rolls against them. Allies can move freely, but enemies treat the mist as lightly obscured.

Usage: Bonus Action

Flavor: "A cloak of mist gathers, hiding you from prying eyes."

Surging Flow

Effect: You enhance an ally's speed with water's fluidity. The target gains an extra 10 feet of movement and can ignore difficult terrain until the end of their next turn.

Usage: Reaction when an ally moves

Flavor: "Like a river's current, you carry them forward effortlessly."

3rd Level Techniques

Crashing Wave Strike

Effect: When you hit a creature with a melee attack, you can unleash a surge of water that forces the target to make a Strength saving throw (DC equal to 8 + your proficiency bonus + your Constitution modifier). On a failure, the target is pushed 10 feet away and knocked prone.

Usage: 1/Short Rest

Flavor: "Water crashes down with the force of a storm, sweeping all in its path."

Icy Embrace

Effect: You summon a burst of frigid water around a target within 30 feet. The target must succeed on a Constitution saving throw or be restrained by ice for 1 minute. They may repeat the saving throw at the end of each of their turns.

Usage: 1/Long Rest

Flavor: "Frozen tides encircle you, locking you in place."

7th Level Techniques

Riptide Step

Effect: You teleport up to 30 feet to a space you can see, leaving behind a whirlpool of water. Creatures within 5 feet of the starting point must make a Strength saving throw or be pulled 10 feet toward the origin point.

Usage: 2/Short Rest

Flavor: "You vanish with a splash, and the water drags others in your wake."

Healing Waters

Effect: You create a restorative pool in a 10-foot radius. Allies in the pool regain hit points equal to 1d8 + your Wisdom modifier at the start of their turns for up to 1 minute.

Usage: 1/Long Rest
Flavor: "The water soothes and mends, washing away wounds and weariness."

10th Level Techniques
Torrent Shield
Effect: As a reaction to being hit by an attack, you summon a barrier of water around yourself or an ally within 10 feet. The barrier absorbs damage equal to 1d12 + your Wisdom modifier before dissipating.
Usage: 3/Long Rest
Flavor: "The water forms a shield, softening the blow before vanishing."
Floodgate Surge
Effect: You unleash a massive wave in a 30-foot cone. All creatures within the area must make a Dexterity saving throw. On a failure, they are knocked prone and take 3d8 bludgeoning damage. On a success, they take half damage and are not knocked prone.
Usage: 2/Long Rest
Flavor: "A wall of water crashes forward, overwhelming everything in its path."

14th Level Techniques
Tide of Renewal
Effect: You create a healing surge that spreads in a 20-foot radius. All allies within the radius regain 2d10 hit points, and one condition of their choice (such as poisoned or frightened) is removed.
Usage: 1/Long Rest
Flavor: "The tide washes away not just wounds, but fear and despair."
Whirlpool Prison
Effect: You summon a massive whirlpool centered on a point within 60 feet. The whirlpool is a 10-foot radius and 20-foot tall cylinder. Any creature that starts its turn inside must make a Strength saving throw or be restrained and pulled to the center. A restrained creature may attempt the saving throw at the end of its turn. The whirlpool lasts for 1 minute or until you dismiss it.
Usage: 1/Long Rest
Flavor: "The waters spiral into a powerful vortex, dragging all into its embrace."

18th Level Techniques
Ocean's Dominion
Effect: You summon the power of an oceanic storm, creating heavy rain and strong winds in a 60-foot radius for 1 minute. While active, creatures of your choice have advantage on Dexterity and Strength saving throws. Enemies treat the area as difficult terrain, and ranged attacks within the storm are made with disadvantage.
Usage: 1/Long Rest
Flavor: "The storm follows your command, hindering foes and empowering your allies."
Tsunami Strike
Effect: You unleash a massive wave that sweeps across a 60-foot line. Creatures caught in the wave must make a Dexterity saving throw. On a failure, they take 8d10 bludgeoning damage and are swept 20 feet away. On a success, they take half damage and remain standing.

Usage: 1/Long Rest

Flavor: "You call upon the fury of the sea, leaving devastation in your wake."

These techniques give Water-attuned Sev'rinns the ability to balance offense, defense, healing, and battlefield control. They emphasize the fluid adaptability of water, while also granting the devastating potential to overwhelm opponents when needed.

Skycaller

Skycaller (Air Attunement) Elemental Shift Table

When activating Elemental Shift as a Skycaller, you harness the volatile and unpredictable power of air currents. Roll 1d6 to determine the nature of the shift and the elemental effect for the duration of the shift.

d6	Effect	Description
1	Cyclone's Touch	You gain 10 feet of additional movement, and opportunity attacks against you are made with disadvantage.
2	Whisper of Winds	You can cast Silent Image or Message at will without using a spell slot.
3	Shockwave Burst	As a reaction, you can push enemies within 10 feet of you back 5 feet whenever you take damage.
4	Gale Guard	You create swirling winds around you, gaining +2 to AC until your next turn.
5	Zephyr Step	You can move through enemy spaces without provoking opportunity attacks. Your movement does not provoke reactions.
6	Tempest Strike	When you hit with a melee attack, you can knock the target prone or push them 10 feet back.

Skycaller Combat Techniques

These techniques allow a Skycaller to manipulate air currents in battle, striking with speed and unpredictability.

- Wind Dance

Prerequisite: 3rd Level

Your movements flow with the winds. As a bonus action, you can Dash, and until the end of your turn, you ignore difficult terrain.

- Air Slash

Prerequisite: 5th Level

When you make a weapon attack, you can extend your strike with a sharp gust of wind. Make a ranged weapon attack (30 ft.). On a hit, it deals your weapon damage type plus 1d8 slashing damage.

- Storm's Wake

Prerequisite: 7th Level

When you successfully land an attack, your target is surrounded by a gust of wind. Until the start of your next turn, the target's movement is halved.

- Flight Mastery

Prerequisite: 10th Level

You learn to ride the winds effortlessly. You gain a flying speed of 30 feet for 1 minute, once per long rest.

- Howling Strike

Prerequisite: 14th Level

When you make a melee weapon attack, you can choose to summon a thunderous boom. The attack deals an extra 2d6 thunder damage, and creatures within 5 feet of the target must succeed on a Strength saving throw (DC = 8 + your proficiency + your Dexterity) or be pushed 15 feet away.

Lithomage

Lithomage (Stone Attunement) Elemental Shift Table

When activating Elemental Shift as a Lithomage, you channel the immense, grounding power of stone. Roll 1d6 to determine the nature of the shift and the effect it grants for the duration.

d6	Effect	Description
1	Granite Skin	You gain temporary hit points equal to your level + Constitution modifier.
2	Earthen Anchor	Your movement becomes immune to being reduced, and you cannot be knocked prone.
3	Stonegrasp	As a bonus action, you can make the ground beneath a creature grasp them. The target must succeed on a Strength saving throw (DC 8 + your proficiency + Strength modifier) or be restrained until the end of your next turn.
4	Seismic Aura	Every enemy that starts their turn within 5 feet of you must succeed on a Dexterity saving throw or be pushed 5 feet back.
5	Fortress Stance	You gain a +2 bonus to AC, and allies within 5 feet of you gain half cover.
6	Boulder Step	When you move, the ground quakes. Creatures you move past must make a Dexterity saving throw or fall prone. You can move through enemy spaces without provoking opportunity attacks.

Lithomage Combat Techniques

The Lithomage wields the steady, unyielding force of the earth in combat, fortifying themselves while disrupting their enemies.

- Stoneguard

Prerequisite: 3rd Level

As a reaction to being hit by an attack, you can reduce the damage by 1d8 + your Constitution modifier. You can use this feature a number of times equal to your proficiency bonus, regaining uses on a long rest.

- Pulverizing Strike

Prerequisite: 5th Level

When you land a melee weapon attack, you can channel stone energy to deal an additional 2d6 bludgeoning damage. The target must make a Strength saving throw or be knocked prone.

- Rock Wall

Prerequisite: 7th Level

As a bonus action, you summon a wall of earth 5 feet high and 10 feet long within 30 feet of you. The wall provides half cover to creatures behind it and lasts until the start of your next turn.

- Tectonic Shift

Prerequisite: 10th Level

You cause the battlefield to tremble. As an action, every creature within 20 feet of you must make a Dexterity saving throw or be knocked prone. Structures or objects within range take 2d8 bludgeoning damage.

- Pillar Strike

Prerequisite: 14th Level

When you hit with a melee weapon, you can create a 10-foot stone pillar beneath your target. The target is launched upward, taking 4d6 bludgeoning damage and falling prone. You can use this ability once per short or long rest.

Greenheart

Greenheart (Nature Attunement) Elemental Shift Table

Channeling the energy of life itself, the Greenheart attunes to the thriving forces of nature. Roll 1d6 to determine the manifestation of your Elemental Shift.

d6	Effect	Description
1	Thornskin	You sprout thorned vines along your skin. Any creature that hits you with a melee attack takes 1d6 piercing damage.
2	Verdant Cloak	You blend with nature, gaining advantage on Dexterity (Stealth) checks and partial cover in foliage-heavy areas.
3	Rooted Resilience	As a bonus action, you root yourself in place. You can't be knocked prone or moved against your will.
4	Bloom of Renewal	When you are healed, you regain additional hit points equal to your proficiency bonus. Nearby allies within 10 feet gain half this bonus.
5	Venomous Bloom	As an action, you can release a poisonous spore cloud. Creatures within 10 feet must succeed on a Constitution saving throw or become poisoned for 1 minute.
6	Symbiotic Regrowth	When an ally within 10 feet of you is healed, you recover hit points equal to your Constitution modifier.

Greenheart Combat Techniques

The Greenheart embodies the adaptive strength of nature, turning environmental advantages and living forces to their benefit. They grow, heal, and entangle, turning the battlefield into an extension of themselves.

- Bramble Snare

Prerequisite: 3rd Level

When you hit a creature with a melee weapon attack, vines lash from the earth, restraining the target (Strength save to resist). You can use this ability a number of times equal to your proficiency bonus, regaining uses after a long rest.

- Pollinating Strike

Prerequisite: 5th Level

When you land a melee hit, you can cause pollen to burst, blinding the target. The creature must succeed on a Constitution saving throw or be blinded until the end of its next turn.

- Nature's Sanctuary

Prerequisite: 7th Level

As a bonus action, you create a 15-foot radius of flourishing plants around you. Allies inside the radius have advantage on death saving throws and recover 1d4 hit points at the start of their turn. The sanctuary lasts for 1 minute or until you are incapacitated.

- Adaptive Bloom

Prerequisite: 10th Level

As a reaction when you take damage, you absorb some of the impact. You reduce the damage taken by 1d10 + your Constitution modifier. You also sprout blossoms, granting temporary hit points to an ally within 10 feet equal to half the damage you negated.

- Thornwood Avatar

Prerequisite: 14th Level

You summon a living armor of vines and thorns. For 1 minute, your AC increases by 2, and any creature that hits you with a melee attack takes 3d6 piercing damage. Once you use this feature, you must finish a long rest before using it again.

Chronomancer

Chronomancer (Time Attunement) Elemental Shift Table

The Chronomancer bends the flow of time itself, manipulating seconds as weapons and shields. When you use Elemental Shift, roll 1d6 to determine how your temporal influence manifests.

d6	Effect	Description
1	Temporal Blur	You gain +2 AC as your form flickers between moments, making you harder to target.
2	Speed Surge	As a bonus action, you can take the Dash or Disengage action. Your movement does not provoke opportunity attacks this turn.
3	Frozen Time	You can freeze a small object (no larger than 1 cubic foot) in time for 1 minute, making it immune to damage and decay.
4	Rewind Strike	When you miss with a melee or ranged attack, you can reroll

the attack. You must use the second roll. |

| 5 | Echo of Action | As a reaction, you can duplicate an ally's movement from their last turn, moving the same distance in the same direction. |

| 6 | Lingering Moment | At the start of your turn, regain a spell slot of 3rd level or lower that you expended in the previous round. |

Chronomancer Combat Techniques

The Chronomancer warps the battlefield with unpredictable shifts in time, disorienting enemies and giving their allies the advantage. Their techniques reflect the power to delay, accelerate, or rewrite moments in combat.

- Time Spike

Prerequisite: 3rd Level

As a reaction to an enemy entering your melee range, you can trap them in a temporal distortion. The target must succeed on a Wisdom saving throw or be restrained for 1 round as time locks their movements.

- Temporal Reversal

Prerequisite: 5th Level

As a bonus action, you rewind the last 6 seconds. Choose one creature within 30 feet to restore hit points equal to half the damage they took since the end of your last turn. This ability can be used once per long rest.

- Time Sink

Prerequisite: 7th Level

You create a 10-foot radius time dilation field for 1 minute. Enemies inside the field have their speed halved, and attacks they make are rolled at disadvantage. Once used, this ability recharges after a long rest.

- Parallel Future

Prerequisite: 10th Level

You glimpse a possible outcome of an action. After rolling a d20 for an attack or ability check, you can roll again and choose either result. This ability recharges after a short or long rest.

- Time Avatar

Prerequisite: 14th Level

You take on the form of a time-warped being for 1 minute. During this time, you gain the following benefits:

- You take two turns in each round of combat.
- If you are reduced to 0 hit points, you rewind to 1 hit point instead (this occurs once).

Once you use this feature, you can’t use it again until you complete a long rest.

Voidstrider

Voidstrider (Space Attunement) Elemental Shift Table

As a Voidstrider, you manipulate space itself, bending the battlefield to your will. When you activate Elemental Shift, roll 1d6 to determine the effect.

| d6 | Effect | Description |

|:---:|---------|----------|

| 1 | Gravity Surge | Choose a point within 30 feet. Creatures in a 10-foot radius must succeed on a Strength saving throw or be pulled 10 feet toward the point. |

| 2 | Void Slip | As a reaction to an attack, teleport 10 feet to an unoccupied space you can see. This ability nullifies the triggering attack if you move out of range. |

| 3 | Planar Echo | Leave an illusionary duplicate in your space. The duplicate lasts until the start of your next turn, distracting enemies and giving the first attack against you disadvantage. |

| 4 | Gravitational Anchor | For 1 minute, you cannot be moved or knocked prone by any means. |

| 5 | Void Blink | As a bonus action, teleport up to 15 feet. You can use this movement to pass through solid objects but cannot end your turn inside them. |

| 6 | Singularity Shield | A swirling void protects you for 1 minute. Gain +2 AC, and ranged attacks against you are rolled with disadvantage. |

Voidstrider Combat Techniques

Voidstriders excel at battlefield mobility, controlling space to confuse enemies and protect allies. They are masters of unpredictable movement and spatial manipulation.

- Spatial Displacement

Prerequisite: 3rd Level

As a bonus action, swap places with a willing ally within 30 feet. Both you and the ally gain +2 AC until the start of your next turn.

- Warping Step

Prerequisite: 5th Level

Once per turn, when you move at least 15 feet, your next melee attack deals an extra 1d8 force damage as spatial energy tears through your target.

- Zone of Entropy

Prerequisite: 7th Level

You create a 10-foot radius zone within 60 feet that lasts for 1 minute. Inside this zone, creatures have disadvantage on attack rolls, and all ranged projectiles are absorbed into the void. Recharges after a long rest.

- Gravity Well

Prerequisite: 10th Level

As an action, you generate a field that pulls creatures toward a point of your choosing. Creatures within 30 feet of the point must succeed on a Strength saving throw or be dragged 20 feet toward it. Once used, this ability recharges on a short or long rest.

- Void Mastery

Prerequisite: 14th Level

For 1 minute, you gain the following abilities:

- You can teleport up to 30 feet as a bonus action.
- Attacks against you automatically miss if you teleport after being targeted.
- If you teleport through a creature, that creature takes 2d8 force damage.

Emberclad

Emberclad (Fire Attunement) Elemental Shift Table

As an Emberclad, you wield the relentless fury of flame. Your power turns heat into both a weapon and a shield. When you activate Elemental Shift, roll 1d6 to determine the fiery effect.

d6	Effect	Description
1	Blazing Aura	Flames surround you for 1 minute. Creatures within 5 feet take 1d6 fire damage at the start of their turns.
2	Ignite	As a bonus action, set a flammable object or surface within 30 feet on fire. A creature hit with this effect takes 1d8 fire damage.
3	Inferno Step	When you move at least 10 feet, leave behind burning embers. Any creature that enters the space takes 1d6 fire damage.
4	Searing Touch	Your melee attacks deal an additional 1d6 fire damage for 1 minute.
5	Smoke Veil	You summon a thick smoke cloud around you, heavily obscuring your space for 1 minute. Creatures inside must make a Constitution saving throw or be blinded until the start of their next turn.
6	Explosion of Flames	As an action, release a wave of fire. All creatures within a 15-foot radius must make a Dexterity saving throw or take 2d8 fire damage. On a success, they take half damage. Recharges on a long rest.

Emberclad Combat Techniques

The Emberclad embodies destruction, relentless aggression, and fiery endurance. Their combat techniques allow them to scorch the battlefield and overwhelm foes with heat and flame.

- Scorching Dash

Prerequisite: 3rd Level

When you Dash, fire trails in your wake. Creatures you pass within 5 feet of take 1d6 fire damage and must succeed on a Dexterity saving throw or catch fire, taking 1d6 fire damage at the start of their turn.

- Immolating Strike

Prerequisite: 5th Level

As a bonus action, your weapon erupts in flame. Your next attack deals an additional 2d8 fire damage. If the target is flammable, it ignites and continues burning for 1 minute, taking 1d6 fire damage at the start of each of its turns.

- Blazing Vortex

Prerequisite: 7th Level

You summon a vortex of fire in a 10-foot radius centered on yourself. Creatures in the area must succeed on a Dexterity saving throw or take 3d6 fire damage. This vortex lasts 1 minute or until you dismiss it as a bonus action.

- Molten Core

Prerequisite: 10th Level

Your body radiates intense heat. For 1 minute, any creature that hits you with a melee attack takes 2d6 fire damage. If a creature grapples you, it must succeed on a Constitution saving throw or take 3d6 fire damage each round it maintains the grapple.

- Inferno Mastery

Prerequisite: 14th Level

You can unleash a devastating inferno. As an action, release fire in a 30-foot cone. Creatures in the area must make a Dexterity saving throw or take 8d8 fire damage, or half as much on a success. Once used, this ability recharges after a long rest.

Eidolon

Eidolon Elemental Shift Table

d6 Soul Shift Effect

1 Haunting Echo: The target becomes disoriented, suffering disadvantage on their next attack roll.

2 Soulbond: You create a fleeting connection with an ally within 30 feet. You may swap places with them as a reaction until the end of your next turn.

3 Draining Touch: When you deal damage, regain hit points equal to half the damage dealt.

4 Ethereal Step: You phase into the ethereal plane until the end of your next turn, gaining movement through creatures and objects.

5 Spectral Veil: Shadows cloak your form. Gain +2 AC and advantage on Dexterity (Stealth) checks until the start of your next turn.

6 Phantasmal Assault: Your attack evokes terrifying illusions. The target must succeed on a Wisdom saving throw (DC = 8 + proficiency + Charisma modifier) or be frightened until the end of its next turn.

Eidolon Combat Techniques

· Soulflame Strike (Level 3+): When you hit a creature with a weapon attack, you can expend a use of Elemental Shift to ignite your weapon with ethereal fire. Deal an extra 2d8 psychic damage. This damage increases to 3d8 at 11th level and 4d8 at 17th level.

· Echoing Will (Level 6+): As a reaction, when an ally within 30 feet takes damage, you may absorb part of the pain. Reduce the damage taken by 1d10 + your Charisma modifier and take the same amount.

· Wraith Dance (Level 10+): You vanish and reappear in a flurry of ghostly movement. As a bonus action, teleport to an unoccupied space you can see within 60 feet and make a melee attack.

· Bound by Spirit (Level 14+): You can tether your soul to an enemy for 1 minute. While tethered, any damage the enemy deals to others is halved, but you take the other half as unavoidable damage. You may end this effect as a reaction.

· Eidolon's Ascendance (Level 18+): As an action, for 1 minute, you become a spectral entity. Gain resistance to all damage except force and psychic, and advantage on all saving throws against being charmed or frightened. Additionally, enemies within 10 feet have disadvantage on Wisdom saving throws.

Luminor

Luminor Elemental Shift Table

d6 Light Shift Effect

1 Blinding Flash: A burst of light erupts from you. One creature of your choice within 30 feet must succeed on a Constitution saving throw or be blinded until the end of its next turn.

2 Radiant Burst: When you deal damage, deal an extra 1d8 radiant damage. This increases to 2d8 at 11th level.

3 Sunlit Step: Your movement leaves glowing footprints, and you ignore difficult terrain until the start of your next turn.

4 Beacon's Call: Choose an ally within 60 feet. That ally gains temporary hit points equal to 1d10 + your Charisma modifier.

5 Shadowbane: Any illusion or magical darkness within 15 feet of you is immediately dispelled.

6 Solar Ward: You gain resistance to radiant and fire damage until the start of your next turn.

Luminor Combat Techniques

· Blazing Strike (Level 3+): When you hit a creature with a melee weapon attack, you can expend a use of Elemental Shift to engulf your weapon in searing light, dealing an extra 2d10 radiant damage. This damage increases to 3d10 at 11th level and 4d10 at 17th level.

· Illuminate Path (Level 6+): As a bonus action, you emit a guiding light for 1 minute. Allies within 30 feet of you have advantage on saving throws against being frightened or blinded.

· Brilliant Form (Level 10+): As an action, you transform into a glowing avatar of light for 1 minute. While in this form, your weapon attacks deal an extra 1d6 radiant damage, and enemies that start their turn within 10 feet of you must succeed on a Constitution saving throw or be blinded until the end of their next turn.

· Daybreak's Blessing (Level 14+): As a reaction, when an ally within 30 feet drops to 0 hit points, you can expend an Elemental Shift to heal them for 4d10 hit points and lift them to their feet. They also glow with radiant light, gaining +2 to AC until the start of your next turn.

· Eternal Glow (Level 18+): For 1 minute, you become a living beacon of light. You gain resistance to radiant, fire, and necrotic damage. Your presence causes magical darkness to dissipate in a 30-foot radius, and creatures within the aura cannot benefit from invisibility. Enemies within 10 feet have disadvantage on attack rolls against anyone other than you.

Sorcerer

The Sorcerer Class in Ryndor

Awakened by the Rift

Sorcerers are a new phenomenon in Ryndor, emerging only since the Rift to Nebernoria tore open reality. Unlike Sev'rinns, who align with elemental forces, or Wizards, who bend resonance through study, Sorcerers draw their magic directly from the chaotic energies of the Rift. Their power is unpredictable, alien, and often misunderstood, creating fear and awe wherever they appear. These individuals are conduits for the instability between worlds, and their magic resonates with the strangeness of Nebernoria.

Magic from the Unknown

Sorcerers' abilities are inherently tied to the Rift's influence. Their magic manifests without study or training—it flows through them naturally, like an extension of their will. Each Sorcerer's connection to the Rift is personal, shaped by their exposure to its strange energies. Some are born with this power, while others develop it after direct contact with the Rift. This gift, however, comes with a price: it leaves a mark on both their body and mind, as they channel forces not meant for the material world.

A Blessing and a Burden

Communities often struggle to understand Sorcerers, viewing them with a mix of wonder and suspicion. While their abilities can be useful, the nature of their power is dangerous and unreliable. A seemingly simple spell might ripple into unintended consequences, altering the fabric of reality or awakening lingering influences from Nebernoria. Some Sorcerers are celebrated as heroes for harnessing their abilities to protect others, while others are ostracized, accused of bringing chaos wherever they go.

Shaping Reality

The strength of Sorcerers lies in their adaptability. With no need for external study, they can twist their magic instinctively, shaping it through raw emotion and sheer will. Their access to Metamagic allows them to manipulate spells in ways that others can't match—quickening spells in battle, extending durations, or casting with subtle precision. Yet each spell cast brings them closer to the chaotic forces of the Rift, making every use of magic a delicate balance between control and chaos.

Outcasts of the Rift

Though the Sorcerers are few in number, their existence raises questions about the Rift's ongoing influence on the world. Are they harbingers of something greater, or the first wave of a deeper transformation? Many seek to understand their connection to Nebernoria, while others fear what might happen if the Rift's magic spreads unchecked. Whether accepted or rejected, Sorcerers must navigate both the dangers of their power and the suspicions of those around them, forging their own path in a world that fears what it cannot understand.

In Ryndor, Sorcerers walk the line between creation and collapse. Each spell is a reflection of the Rift's strange potential, and each decision brings them closer to unlocking the mysteries of the magic that flows through their veins—or succumbing to the chaos that surrounds them.

Riftborn Origin

Riftborn Sorcerer

Sorcerous Origin Overview:

Riftborn Sorcerers are individuals whose very essence is intertwined with the chaotic energies of the Rift to Nebernoria. Rather than drawing power from the natural elements of the material world like Sev'rinns, Riftborn Sorcerers embody the unpredictable magic that flows between dimensions. Their magic is unstable, potent, and strange—sometimes enhancing their abilities and at other times bringing unintended consequences. This connection to the Rift makes them both powerful and dangerous, capable of bending reality to their whims, though always at the risk of unraveling the threads of fate.

Features of the Riftborn Origin

1st Level – Chaotic Manifestation:

The magic of the Rift surges unpredictably through you. Whenever you cast a sorcerer spell of 1st level or higher, roll a d6. On a 1, strange magic manifests around you, determined by the Rift Surge Table (provided later). You can roll with advantage on this table once per long rest.

1st Level – Dimensional Instincts:

Your exposure to dimensional anomalies gives you a heightened awareness. You gain proficiency in Arcana and Perception, and you can detect nearby planar anomalies and portals within 60 feet without requiring a check.

6th Level – Phase Step:

You learn to slip through the folds of space. As a bonus action, you can teleport up to 30 feet to an unoccupied space you can see. You can use this feature a number of times equal to your Charisma modifier per long rest.

14th Level – Rift Cloak:

A shroud of dimensional energy shields you from harm. As a reaction when you are hit by an attack, you can shift out of phase, granting yourself resistance to all damage until the start of your next turn and teleporting 10 feet away. You can use this feature once per short or long rest.

18th Level – Tear Reality:

At great personal cost, you can rip open a temporary rift between dimensions. As an action, you summon a 15-foot-radius vortex of unstable energy centered on a point you can see within 60 feet. Creatures in the area must make a Dexterity saving throw against your spell save DC, taking 12d12 force damage on a failed save or half as much on a success. Once you use this feature, you can't do so again until you finish a long rest, unless you spend 10 sorcery points to use it again.

Rift Surge Table (Sample Effects)

d6 Surge Effect

1 Your spell casts twice. Choose a new target.
2 A glowing portal appears, revealing distant scenes.
3 Nearby objects hover 10 feet off the ground.
4 You gain resistance to all damage for 1 minute.
5 A random spell from the wild magic table triggers.
6 Time slows briefly—take an additional action.

The Riftborn Sorcerer is a volatile and powerful magic user, forever on the edge of control. Whether they revel in the chaos or struggle to manage it, they wield energies few can comprehend, making them both a boon and a threat to those around them.

Warlock

The Warlock Class in Ryndor

A Pact Across the Rift

Warlocks in Ryndor are not just wielders of magic—they are conduits, granted power through binding pacts with entities from beyond the Rift. These patrons are beings of immense and alien influence, existing in the astral chaos of Nebernoria. Some patrons grant power in exchange for service, while others use Warlocks as vessels to further strange, unknowable goals. Each pact comes with both gifts and burdens, marking Warlocks as forever tied to the mysteries of the Rift.

The Influence of the Rift

Unlike other magic users, Warlocks' abilities are not their own—they are borrowed, channeled through the connection to their patron. This connection manifests in both subtle and overwhelming ways. Some Warlocks find themselves influenced by strange thoughts and compulsions, hearing whispers or seeing visions from the other side. Others experience physical changes, like glowing eyes, shifting shadows, or strange runes appearing on their skin. Regardless, the magic granted by their patron is unpredictable and otherworldly, leaving a trace of the Rift's influence in everything they do.

Pacts and Power

Warlocks form pacts to gain access to extraordinary abilities, choosing paths that reflect their bond with their patron. These powers are granted through unique gifts—such as Eldritch Invocations, arcane boons that reshape reality, or mysterious familiars summoned from across the Rift. Each Warlock builds a unique relationship with their patron, often negotiating for additional power, though these bargains may come at unforeseen costs.

Navigating Suspicion and Awe

Though Warlocks possess incredible abilities, they are met with suspicion by the people of Ryndor. Their bond with beings from Nebernoria makes them objects of both fear and fascination. Some view them as dangerous puppets of unknown entities, while others admire them as visionaries walking the thin edge between worlds. Warlocks often hide the true nature of their power to avoid scrutiny, but even in secrecy, they feel the weight of their bond pressing down on them—a reminder that the Rift always demands more.

Walking a Forbidden Path

Warlocks represent the untamed possibilities of Ryndor's future. Their power flows not from study or heritage but from the delicate web of trust, debt, and influence binding them to patrons beyond the Rift. Whether driven by ambition, curiosity, or desperation, Warlocks chart their own course through a world that does not yet understand them, forever changed by the gifts and demands of their patron.

In Ryndor, Warlocks stand at the crossroads of power and peril, knowing that every spell they cast echoes across the Rift—inviting the gaze of beings who see far more than any mortal mind can comprehend.

Boons

Pact of the Planebinder

Pact Boon: Planebinder

Warlocks in Ryndor who enter the Pact of the Planebinder gain the ability to tether fragments of otherworldly magic to the material world. Their bond with patrons across the Rift grants them fleeting control over unstable realities, weaving together dimensions for unpredictable, potent results.

Planebinder Features

· Dimensional Echo: As a bonus action, you summon a glimpse of another timeline. The echo replicates a simple action (such as an attack or object interaction), granting you advantage on your next ability check or attack roll. The echo dissipates at the end of your next turn.

· Weave the Rift: When casting a spell, roll a d6. On an even result, your spell's potency surges—such as additional damage, increased range, or heightened saving throw DC. On an odd result, unpredictable energy twists the spell, creating a minor complication (DM's discretion).

· Shiftstep: At 6th level, you can flicker between dimensions. As a reaction to being targeted by an attack, you teleport 30 feet to a visible location. After using this ability, you must complete a short or long rest to use it again.

The Pact of the Planebinder reflects the Warlock's delicate grasp over the strange forces from the Rift. They manipulate threads of reality itself, embracing both the power and unpredictability of tethering planar energies to their will.

Patrons

Rift Patrons for Warlocks in Ryndor

The Rift has opened connections to entities that defy logic and understanding. Warlocks who draw power from these patrons are irrevocably changed, their minds brushed by the unfathomable. These are a few of the powerful entities that grant Rift-bound Warlocks their abilities:

The Blighted Conductor

An ancient intelligence that manipulates resonance and sound, this being exists as a chaotic symphony in a decaying dimension. Warlocks of the Blighted Conductor control vibrations, soundwaves, and madness, sowing discord and confusion wherever they go. Their spells hum with unsettling harmonies, causing pain and distorted perceptions.

Expanded Spells: Dissonant Whispers, Shatter, Synaptic Static

Boons: Gain the ability to temporarily deafen or disorient foes with Rift-born vibrations.

The Endless Dreamer

Existing in an astral realm of slumber, the Endless Dreamer offers knowledge through visions but bends the line between waking and dreaming. Their Warlocks become conduits of sleep magic, bending dreams into reality, and at times confusing the two. Their powers manifest in strange, half-formed dreams that affect allies and enemies unpredictably.

Expanded Spells: Sleep, Dream, Phantasmal Force

Boons: Once per long rest, turn reality into a dreamscape, causing attacks to phase through you or objects to appear ephemeral.

The Shattered One

This patron is a fragmented deity, broken across infinite dimensions, whispering from pieces scattered throughout the Rift. Warlocks of the Shattered One tap into these fragments, gaining access to incomplete but potent bursts of power. However, they experience fractured visions of other timelines, becoming increasingly aware of alternate realities where every decision splinters.

Expanded Spells: Blink, Mirror Image, Dimension Door

Boons: Once per rest, reroll an ability check, attack, or saving throw, as if shifting through timelines to find a better outcome.

The Hunger Between Stars

This entity is a vast, formless force of consumption, existing between the dimensions of space and time. Warlocks who serve the Hunger siphon their patron's insatiable appetite, draining life, energy, or even memories from others. As their influence grows, they become void-like conduits of entropy, consuming all that touches them.

Expanded Spells: Arms of Hadar, Hunger of Hadar, Maddening Darkness

Boons: Once per rest, you may absorb a magical effect targeted at you, nullifying it and gaining temporary hit points.

Each Rift patron brings not only power but an existential burden, leaving their Warlocks forever altered by the strange forces they have invited into their lives. In Ryndor, becoming a Warlock of the Rift means embracing the unpredictable, straddling the line between understanding and madness, between creation and oblivion.

The Many Mouthed Mother

The Many-Mouthed Mother

The Many-Mouthed Mother is a patron of insatiable hunger and chaotic creation, emerging from the most twisted depths of the Rift. She is said to be a colossal, ever-changing being with countless mouths, each whispering promises, warnings, or maddening truths. Her followers crave to consume—knowledge, power, emotions, or flesh—and offer her tributes by spreading chaos and devouring everything in their path, metaphorically or literally. Those who serve the Many-Mouthed Mother find their own bodies and minds shifting, growing extra senses or physical changes, as they slowly become part of her insatiable will.

Expanded Spells:

- Tasha's Hideous Laughter
- Devour Life
- Confusion
- Phantasmal Killer
- Wall of Mouths

Boons of the Mother:

- Ravenous Maw: As an action, summon a gnashing mouth on your hand for 1 minute. The maw deals 1d8 + Charisma modifier in slashing or psychic damage on a hit. It can consume simple objects, removing curses or corrupting them into Weirded variants.
- Gift of Whispers: Gain the ability to speak with two voices simultaneously—one sweet and persuasive, the other harsh and intimidating. Once per long rest, you can force a creature to make a Wisdom save or act under an implanted compulsion for 1 minute.

Invocation of Endless Appetite: Your hunger becomes insatiable, granting you temporary hit points equal to half the damage dealt each time you kill a creature. But with each kill, a small mutation forms—an eye where one shouldn't be, teeth beneath your palm, or a whispered craving from deep within.

Serving the Many-Mouthed Mother brings both power and a curse—those who follow her struggle to maintain their identity, slowly losing themselves to the endless hunger of their patron. Every spell cast is an invitation to consume, to spread chaos, and to nurture the Mother's relentless desires.

Wizard

Wizards of Ryndor

In Ryndor, Wizards embody the relentless pursuit of knowledge. Their mastery comes not from the innate gifts of the Sev'rinn or the otherworldly pull of the Rift but from the study of the Primeval Resonance—the fundamental energy that hums beneath all existence. They explore the ancient mysteries, analyze elemental harmonics, and shape magic through deliberate craft and careful discipline.

Wizards in Ryndor view magic as a tool of precision, wielded with skill and wisdom. They are scholars, inventors, and strategists—those who believe in mastering reality through understanding and careful manipulation.

The Role of Wizards in Ryndor

Wizards often serve as advisors to rulers, members of arcane councils, or archivists in magical academies. Some are wanderers, traveling Ryndor in search of lost relics, ancient spells, or forgotten secrets of the Resonance. Others dedicate their lives to the Crystal Scholars or align themselves with the Keepers of the Rift, hoping to contain or explore the arcane anomalies created by The Weirding.

Power through Study

Unlike Sev'rinns, who wield elemental forces instinctively, Wizards must immerse themselves in years of study. They learn to harness the Resonance's frequency patterns through written spells, incantations, and mathematical formulas. Their magic is precise, demanding preparation and insight, but offers unparalleled flexibility in return.

The Wizard's Journey

Most wizards begin their journey by attending one of the many magical institutions scattered across Ryndor, such as the Holmea Skola or the research enclaves within Eveltoft. Others travel independently, joining secret orders or arcane societies. However, all share a common goal: mastery of magic through knowledge. Wizards of Ryndor are innovators, blending tradition with invention to craft spells that push the boundaries of magic.

Specialization: The School of Harmonics

Unique to Ryndor is the School of Harmonics, a discipline focusing on the resonance patterns that underpin existence. These wizards learn to manipulate elemental frequencies, channeling spells like a composer guiding an orchestra. By tuning into the hum of the Resonance, they can amplify their magic, disrupt opponents, or align spells with specific elemental forces. Harmonics-trained wizards are rare and highly sought after, capable of bending the arcane to create moments of breathtaking power.

Wizards in Ryndor are symbols of reason and control in a chaotic world—a reminder that even amidst the turmoil of The Weirding and the unpredictable magic of the Rift, mastery through knowledge remains a powerful force.

School of Harmonics

Let's build a new Wizard school for Ryndor centered around the Primeval

Resonance—the underlying mystical force that binds reality. This school, called the School of Harmonics, focuses on the delicate manipulation of these elemental frequencies, allowing wizards to align, amplify, or disrupt the natural patterns of magic.

School of Harmonics

Wizards of this school become experts in the resonance of magic, learning to perceive the ebb and flow of arcane frequencies. Through years of study, they learn to tune into the hum of existence, using these harmonic patterns to bend magic to their will. They don't just cast spells—they weave them into the fabric of the world itself.

Features of the School of Harmonics:

2nd Level – Resonant Pulse:
You learn to emit bursts of harmonic energy. Whenever you cast a spell of 1st level or higher, you create a Resonant Pulse. This pulse reverberates outward, giving allies within 10 feet advantage on their next skill check or saving throw before the start of your next turn.

6th Level – Tune the Arcane:
You become adept at shifting the resonance of your spells to suit the situation. When casting a spell that deals damage, you can change the damage type to one aligned with the core elements of Ryndor: fire, water, air, stone, light, or shadow. You can use this feature a number of times equal to your Intelligence modifier per long rest.

10th Level – Harmonic Ward:
Your connection to the resonance protects you from magical interference. When you are affected by a spell, you can use your reaction to force the caster to make an Intelligence saving throw against your spell save DC. On a failure, the spell fizzles and has no effect on you. You can use this feature once per short or long rest.

14th Level – Symphony of the Elements:
You master the ability to orchestrate a symphony of resonant magic. When casting a spell of 5th level or lower, you can cast a second spell of equal or lower level as part of the same action, provided both spells target different creatures or areas. This ability can be used once per long rest.

The School of Harmonics represents not just a form of spellcasting but a philosophy—one that treats magic as music and the wizard as a composer of unseen symphonies. Wizards of this school are equally comfortable amplifying allies' strength, disrupting enemies' magic, or bending the elements to their will through careful tuning of arcane frequencies.

Faces and the Souls Within

This chapter presents example characters built using both the familiar classes of the 5th Edition Open Gaming License and the custom options unique to Ryndor. Each build draws from the world's shifting currents: Leoporin born of the Swiftstone's pulse, bards who carry lanterns of unreal clarity, sorcerers marked by dimensional rupture. These examples are not archetypes, but invitations—to walk in strange footsteps, to ask difficult questions, and to see yourself not as a trope, but as a fracture of the world's soul made flesh.

Whether you are a player seeking inspiration or a GM looking to seed your world with evocative NPCs, the following entries offer fully realized characters with backstory, mechanical build notes, and thematic resonance. They span across races and roles, from haunted guides to starlit tricksters, from the scarred survivors of Weird Zones to the forgeborn thinkers of the Khuzud deepways.

Here, you'll find not only stats, but stories. Not only features, but flaws. Each of these faces bears the marks of the Weirding. Each of these souls has reason to venture forward into the dark.

Turn the page. The weird is waiting.

Isera Wyrgleam, Riftborn Sorcerer

Name: Isera Wyrgleam
Race: Leoporin
Class: Sorcerer (Riftborn Origin)
Background: Weirding Refugee
Alignment: Chaotic Good
Gender: Female
Age: 19
Height: 4'3"
Fur Color: Dappled silver and moss green
Eyes: Iridescent violet
Languages: Common, Leoporin, Sylvan

☒ BACKSTORY: Touched by the Rift, Bound to the Forest

Isera was born in the Earthkin Hollows beneath Blossomthorn Grove, a remote corner of Wulfricton where the petals fall like snow and the trees sing softly in their sleep. Like most Leoporin, her early life was full of forest games, song-hunting, and morning burrow duties. Her people lived by rhythm and light: moonlit harvests, shared meals, and the teachings of the Luminari.

But when she was twelve, the sky cracked.

A Weird Zone rupture tore open a seam in the fabric of the forest—not natural magic, not Luminar, but something older, hungrier. It swallowed part of the grove, warping trees into spirals, singing animals into dust, and tainting the Swiftstone's resonance for miles.

Isera barely survived. When she woke, she was alone, her fur threaded with white streaks and her eyes shimmering violet. The others said she must have been marked, that the Rift had tried to devour her—but changed its mind. Ever since, she's heard the humming of things that don't belong, seen shapes in the leaves that flicker from this world into the next.

The shard of strange glass she carries is from that day—found lodged in her paw when she woke. It glows faintly when the stars move wrong.

Unable to stay, but too volatile to be fully trusted, Isera left Aelurin at seventeen. The Luminari gifted her a rune-wrapped satchel and a whispered blessing: "Let the stars be sharp, and the forest kinder than the sky."

She's wandered since—following rumors of leyline sickness, vanished scouts, and unstable resonance sites. Most think her cursed, but the Holmean Magical Creature Society saw potential. They sent her on low-risk missions to observe Weirding shifts—until recently, when the green growth started to pulse with Rift-energy she could feel in her teeth.

Now she walks the balance between memory and madness, nature and unraveling.
And she wants to know why the forest bleeds green.

☒ Personality Traits

- Quietly intense
- : Isera doesn't waste words, but every silence feels charged.
- Obsessively curious
- : She cannot leave a mystery untouched—even if it bites back.
- Forest-sure
- : She knows how to listen to roots, read wind, and follow moss.

☒ Flaws

- Fear of being "lost again"
- : She hides signs of her magic's instability.
- Trust Issues
- : Too many people have tried to "study" her. She flinches from authority.

☒ Bonds

- The Swiftstone
- still whispers in her dreams. She believes it wants to heal.
- She keeps a journal of strange dreams
- , convinced they are memories of a world before the Rift.

☒ Ideal

- "Even broken things have patterns. Even chaos has echoes."
- She believes that understanding the Rift might allow her to one day seal it—or even reverse it.

☒ BACKSTORY: The Echo of Lost Lights

Born in the sleeping depths of Ban Mynydd, where the tunnels outnumber the living and sound travels like breath through stone, Tuurvak learned early that silence does not mean safety. The child of artisan philosophers, he was trained in tonal mapping and lithosonic resonance—Khuzud arts that use echolocation to shape tunnels and tune stone.

When he was still young by Khuzud reckoning, his curiosity led him upward—too far, too fast. He breached into a collapsed cavern near Dollow Canyon, where strange spirits hummed through shattered crystals and half-melted glyphs. There, among the ghosts of failed rituals, a voice found him. It spoke not in Inglishmek, but in forgotten breath. Since then, he has not slept in true silence.

He emerged altered. Not cursed, his kin insisted—attuned. His old tonal lantern now flickers with spectral hues, and ghosts follow him like echoes. Among surface folk, this made him an outcast. Among the College of Lanterns, it made him a candle in the void.

Tuurvak joined the College to understand what the ghosts want—and what the Weirding has taken. His voice is a quiet drone, his gestures methodical. His songs are felt more than heard: pulse-beats in the bones, shimmerings in the dark. His lantern cuts illusions not with flame, but with frequency.

He does not fear the Weirding.
He fears forgetting what came before it.

☒ Personality Traits

- Stone-Slow and Precise:
- Tuurvak processes everything before reacting. His silence is weighted, not empty.
- Speaks Through Echo:
- Often uses Inglishmek even among those who can't read it, expecting the world to keep up.
- Mildly amused by death.
- He's seen too many ghosts to take the end seriously.

☒ Flaws

- Sunlight-averse:
- Exposure to daylight is disorienting and painful.
- Dismisses surface emotions:
- Sees most other races as emotionally fragile or overly impulsive.
- Can't let a spirit rest if it speaks to him first.
- Compelled to solve or resolve the unfinished.

☒ Bonds

- The
- ghost who found him
- in Dollow still follows him—and has never revealed its name.
- He hums the
- first tonal phrase
- ever spoken by Moradin, passed through ancestral dreaming.
- Keeps a pebble from the cavern where he first saw ghostlight. He believes it hums only for him.

☒ Ideal

"Light is not the opposite of shadow. It is its memory."

He believes the Weirding is not chaos, but memory misaligned, and seeks to realign it through resonance and ritual.

☒ CHARACTER BUILD: Level 1 – Khuzud Bard (Lantern-Bound)

☒ Step 1: Concept Summary

- Race:

- Khuzud (blind, echolocative dwarves)
- Class:
- Bard (Lantern path will manifest fully at level 3)
- Background:
- Ghostwhisperer of Dollow Canyon
- Level:

    This makes Tuurvak:
- A
- truth-revealer
- in dark or uncertain areas.
- A
- guiding anchor
- in Weird Zones.
- A
- team buffer
- who exposes deception and protects from ambushes.

Varkos "Tempest-Born" Drayden

Race: Human
Class: Barbarian, Path of the Howling Tempest
Background: Kigan Uldar Champion (Thunderbolts, Skyfire League)
Alignment: Chaotic Good
Gender: Male
Age: 34
Height: 6’3”
Build: Muscular, broad-shouldered, built for impact
Eyes: Lightning blue
Skin: Deep tan, scarred knees and forearms
Hair: Shaved sides, long silver topknot
Languages: Common

☒ BACKSTORY: The Storm Leaves the Arena

Varkos Drayden once ruled the skies of the Skyfire League as the Thunderbolts’ premier striker—a blur of motion and muscle known across Ryndor as “Tempest-Born.” His signature play, Vault Spiral into Slam Dive, earned him records, endorsements, and the love of a thousand chanting crowds.

But that was before the Weirding touched the game. A rogue planar rift surged mid-finals, warping the orb and disfiguring two players in front of thousands. Varkos ripped off his armband and left the field before the match ended. "You can't cage the storm without courting lightning," he muttered—and disappeared.

Now he walks Ryndor as a wanderer and a weapon, the storm still alive inside him. What once delighted crowds now terrifies monsters and bandits. He still wears his Thunderbolts gear, weather-worn and blood-smeared, and he hasn't forgotten how to move like a strike of lightning and hit like the echo.

☒ Personality Traits

- Charismatic Swagger:
- Varkos treats most interactions like a pre-game interview—confident, wry, and brimming with presence.
- Storm Seeker:
- He goes wherever chaos brews, like wind chasing pressure drops.

☒ Flaws

- Addicted to Speed:
- Still chases the rush of movement, of making the winning play—even if the game's long over.
- Authority Issues:
- He distrusts uniforms and emblems—even ones he used to wear.

☒ Bonds

- The Thunderbolts:
- They're still his team, even if he walked out. He'd bleed to protect their legacy.
- The Skyfire Flame:
- A trophy from his first league win, hidden in his pack, burned into his memory.

☒ Ideal

"A real storm doesn't need permission to arrive."

He believes might and motion must serve purpose, not glory. If there's danger ahead, he'll hit it head-on.

☒ CHARACTER BUILD: Level 1 Human Barbarian (Tempest Path at 3rd)

☒ Step 1: Concept Summary

A former sports legend now turned wandering warrior, Tuurvak blends showmanship and sheer power. He channels his fury like a controlled weather event—flashy, brutal, impossible to ignore.

☒ Step 2: Ability Scores (Point Buy)

Ability Base Bonus Final Notes Strength 15 +1 (Human) 16 Main melee stat Dexterity 13 +1 (Human) 14 AC bonus, initiative Constitution 14 +1 (Human) 15 HP, Rage durability Intelligence 8 +1 (Human) 9 Dump stat Wisdom 10 +1 (Human) 11 Insight, Perception Charisma 10 +1 (Human) 11 Intimidation & showmanship

- (matches Kigan Uldar mobility)

☒ Step 5: Background – Kigan Uldar Champion

- Skill Proficiencies:
- Athletics (overlap), Intimidation (overlap)
- Tool Proficiency:
- Gaming set (Kigan Uldar miniatures)
- Language:
- Auran (used in sport chants and mid-game signals)
- Feature – Fame of the Field:
  - You're recognized in taverns and cities where Kigan Uldar is known.
  - Gain hospitality, free food/lodging, and access to competitions or wealthy sports patrons.
- Equipment:
  - Cloth armband from the Thunderbolts
  - Athletic uniform (storm-split cloak)
  - Waterskin
  - Pouch with 12 gp

☒ Core Advancement at Level 3

☒ Rage (Upgraded)

- Uses per Long Rest:
- 3
- Rage Damage Bonus:
- +2
- While raging:
  - Advantage on Strength checks and Strength saving throws
  - Melee weapon attacks using Strength deal +2 bonus damage
  - Resistance to bludgeoning, piercing, and slashing damage
  - Cannot cast or concentrate on spells

☒ Path of the Howling Tempest Features (Gained at Level 3)

☒ Stormbound Rage

When Varkos enters his rage, the winds of the storm awaken around him. While raging:

- +10 ft movement speed
- When Varkos moves at least 10 feet toward a creature and hits it with a melee weapon attack:
  - The target takes
  - +1d6 thunder damage
- Enemies within 10 feet
- of Varkos are affected by swirling winds, making the area
- difficult terrain
- for them

This makes Varkos even more mobile, aggressive, and disruptive in close quarters—mirroring his athletic, fluid style as a former Kigan Uldar striker.

☒ Other Level 3 Upgrades

☒ Maximum Hit Points

- 3d12 + Constitution mod x3
- Example: 12 (avg) + 3 (Con mod) = 15 HP per level →
- ~45 HP

☒ Primal Path: Path of the Howling Tempest

- Chosen at this level, granting access to
- Stormbound Rage

☒ Unarmored Defense (Retained)

- AC = 10 + Dex mod + Con mod
- Example: Dex +2, Con +3 →

- AC 15 without armor

☒ Skill Proficiencies (From Class & Background)

- Athletics
- (Kigan Uldar)
- Intimidation
- (Kigan Uldar)
- Perception
- (Barbarian)
- Survival
- (Barbarian)

☒ Tool Proficiency

- One gaming set (e.g., Kigan Uldar playboard or magnetic orb controller)

☒ Fame of the Field (Background Feature)

- Recognition in towns that follow Kigan Uldar
- Advantage on Charisma checks with fans or local organizers
- Can gain shelter, food, and entry into events through sport reputation

☒ Combat Style Role at Level 3

Varkos now thrives as a high-speed skirmisher, using his bonus movement and thunder-punch melee attacks to:

- Close gaps quickly
- Push through frontline chaos
- Disrupt enemy formations
- with difficult terrain aura
- Smash priority targets
- with raw power and storm damage

He's fast, ferocious, and loud—just like he was in the arena.

Of Roots and Ruin

UNDER CONSTRUCTION

Of Roots and Ruin

No players allowed beyond this point—Dungeon Masters only! Spoilers abound here, revealing the full arc of the campaign and what awaits the heroes.

Welcome to the campaign that will carry your characters from humble beginnings to uncovering a web of corruption buried beneath the surface of Ryndor's seemingly perfect society. In Of Roots and Ruin, adventurers embark on a journey shaped by hard truths, shifting power, and ethical dilemmas—where magic and nature are on the brink of annihilation

The campaign begins at Level 1 and progresses with each completed episode. At the end of each episode, characters will gain a level, culminating in an epic confrontation by Level 5. This design ensures the pace remains fast, and players stay engaged, with challenges scaling alongside their growing abilities.

Whenever a creature, NPC, or item appears in bold, it indicates the name is listed in the appendix. This is your cue to consult the appendix for detailed stats and abilities, helping keep your session running smoothly and maintaining the campaign's rhythm.

Episode Guide

Episode 1: Follow the Rumors

The adventurers start small, following strange reports of missing animals and unsettling occurrences with unknown origins in Norwycke and near the Hurstwold. Players will encounter clues—fragmented stories from locals, mysterious symbols, and strange traces of creatures and plants corrupted by something other than the Weirding. Right as they're getting close to something, a mysterious figure makes it clear they aren't welcome in Norwycke, and they especially aren't welcome to be poking around where they don't belong.

Episode 2: Uncover the Dead Creatures

As the heroes delve deeper, they discover remains of magical beings—unicorn horns, mermaid scales, and other remnants harvested with surgical precision. Who is responsible for these atrocities, and how far do they reach?

Episode 3: Discover the Technology

The adventurers stumble upon new, unsettling technology—a mix of Ullac Regime machinery and Weirded enchantments. This twisted innovation uses magical creatures as fuel, destabilizing the environment and sowing chaos in nearby settlements.

Episode 4: Find the Thread of the Ullac

Tracking the remains of this operation leads the adventurers closer to the heart of the Ullac Regime's last vestiges. Strange allies and dangerous enemies stand in their way, and decisions must be made—whether to destroy or co-opt this powerful but deadly technology.

Episode 5: Encounter the Baddies, Make Your Choice

In the climactic final encounter, the adventurers face Ullac loyalists—individuals corrupted by both their beliefs and the Weirding's influence. Do they dismantle this dark enterprise entirely, or do they wrest control and attempt to reshape it for the better?

Story Overview

Episode 1: Going Green

Summary

The adventure begins at the Holmean Magical Creature Society's headquarters in Wyrmbost. During a morning meeting, Ardella Lentris is interrupted by a ranger who brings in a farmer covered in invasive green growth. As the Society investigates, the characters are sent to Norwycke, where rumors of the same growths persist. They travel across the Innerstifla Sound under the guidance of captain Brun Furlow. Upon arrival in Norwycke, the players find a town struggling against the overwhelming spread of green growths, discovering hints that a mysterious Greensalve temporarily halts the infection.

As the players go in search of Greensalve of their own, they discover signs that Feddel, the proprietor of Feddel APothecary, has gone missing under suspicious circumstances. While snooping around, a hooded figure enters the apothecary and suspects the players are the suppliers of the Greensalve. After they clear the air and convince the figure to trust them, he introduces himself as Halric, and reveals his suspicion that the green growth is no accident - the Greensalve suppliers have done it on purpose, to profit from their own cure.

The clues to track down the suppliers are very limited - just a strange symbol in a ledger, and the last place Halric saw Feddel.

There's Green.... on Everything

The green growth is a side effect of the Ullac Regime's machine, which is designed to extract raw magical essence from specific creatures. The machine relies on harvested magical components like unicorn horns, pixie wings, and other potent organic sources. However, the residual energy released from this process—an unstable blend of natural magic and Weirding energies—escapes into the environment, causing the uncontrolled fungal growth.

The growth acts like a magical parasite, spreading rapidly and infusing with resonance energy, corrupting the land and destabilizing the local ecosystem. This unintended consequence threatens to unravel nature's delicate balance, while the remnants of the Ullac cabal disregard the danger in their quest for power. This link becomes clearer as the players piece together clues, revealing that the fungal spread isn't just an anomaly—it's a symptom of the cabal's sinister, ongoing work hidden deep within the Hurstwold.

An Unusual Meeting

The day begins like any other at the Holmean Magical Creature Society's headquarters, with sunlight filtering through stained-glass windows. The compound hums with activity: caretakers feed enchanted creatures, apprentices study under experienced Sev'rinns, and researchers debate strange reports from the field.

As the characters gather for their morning meeting, the usual bustle of the Holmean Magical Creature Society is interrupted by a loud commotion at the front gate. Ardella pauses, narrowing her eyes as the noise grows louder—shouts, hurried footsteps, and the low hum of unfamiliar magic.

At the head of the room, Ardella Lentris (Notable Figures, pg. X) the lead field coordinator, leans over her notes, adjusting her spectacles. "All right, everyone, quiet down. We've got a packed day—new reports came in overnight."

She taps a list on the board. "Routine habitat inspections, a few rescue missions, and—"

Just as she starts to unroll a scroll from a metal receptacle, a disheveled ranger patrol officer bursts into the room, dragging in a half-collapsed farmer. The farmer's clothes are tangled with green tendrils, green fungus creeping up his arms. He gasps, struggling to speak, "It's... growing on everything... the houses, the fields... even... on us."

The ranger turns to Ardella, panting, "Something's not right—this stuff is spreading fast, and it's moving like it has a mind of its own."

As you're watching, you can see the fungus growing up the farmer's arms, and growing where it drops to the ground or on the ranger's clothes. (DC5 perception)

Ardella snaps into action, pulling a small stone from her pocket. Speaking into it: "We're going to need containment in the main conference room. Bio flora - unknown origin."

If the players don't immediately react, the ranger urges them to help stabilize the farmer or contain the spreading growths. Ardella throws them a pack containing gloves, enchanted shears, and vials of solvent designed to neutralize rogue flora.

- Skill Challenge Options:
- Medicine (DC 10): Try to slow the fungal growth on the farmer's body.
- Nature (DC 12): Identify the fungus and its strange properties.
- Arcana (DC 13): Detect the lingering presence of unknown magical energy.

As the characters act, the fungus spreads further, covering the farmer's face and choking his breathing.

Players must decide quickly whether to cut the tendrils loose, contain them with solvents, or retreat to a safer location. Every moment of hesitation risks more spread.

The farmer, overwhelmed by the fungus, jerks violently before turning still. The green tendrils pulse with eerie light as he mutates into a strange hybrid of man and plant. His body twists, eyes glowing with an unsettling emerald hue—he is no longer entirely human. But he remains completely still.

When the immediate crisis is contained, Ardella barks quick orders to secure the room and assigns the players to investigate. "You're going to Norwycke," she says, "We need to figure out what caused this before it spreads."

The ranger, now in shock, can only mutter, "It's in the soil. In the wind..."

Making arrangements to leave, the ranger will meet the players before they head out. He will meet them in Norwycke, he has something to attend to first.

Crossing the Sound

To reach Norwycke, the players must first travel to Leighmore, a small fishing village on the southern edge of the Innerstifla Sound. Known for its wary seafarers and stubborn independence, Leighmore provides the only practical route across the treacherous waters to Norwycke.

The scent of brine and fish oil clings to the air as you step onto Leighmore's weathered dock. Salt-encrusted fishing boats bob lazily in the cold water. A gruff ferryman named Brun Forlow (Notable Figures, pg. X) greets you with a skeptical look. "Going across the Sound, eh? Can't say I recommend it this season—but coin's coin." His boat, the Stone Current, awaits your boarding, rocking with the restless tide.

Brun hauls up the anchor with practiced ease, and the boat begins to glide across the surface of the Sound. The cold wind bites at your skin as mist rolls in, swallowing the shoreline behind you.

If the players make conversation with Brun during the crossing, he has the following talking points to share:

· "It's been getting worse out there."

– Brun mentions that he's heard unsettling talk from other sailors and merchants about strange occurrences beyond the usual.

· "The trees aren't right, neither is the air."

– He describes the atmosphere near the forest as heavy and unnatural, like it's watching you.

· "Folks say green tendrils are showing up in places they shouldn't—wrapping around barns, crawling across fields."

– He shares gossip that the green fungus seems to grow unnaturally fast, creeping into places overnight.

· "Some say it's the Weirding. Some say it's worse."

– Brun doesn't hide his unease, hinting that the rumors are spooking even experienced locals.

· "A couple of boats went missing last month. Never came back from their route across the Sound."

– He adds that strange disappearances have increased, including boats vanishing in calm waters.

· "I heard the folk in Norwycke don't sleep much these days. Say something's moving through the trees at night."

– Brun shares unsettling rumors of strange sounds and sightings in the forest, making it hard for people to sleep.

· "Used to just be stories. Now, there's no one laughing about it."

– He expresses that what was once a local joke has turned into a genuine cause for fear.

The boat ride turns into an unexpected challenge, where the players must take control of the situation after the ferryman, Brun Forlow, becomes incapacitated.

The mist thickens, and Brun leans forward, squinting as he steers the boat through narrow channels. Just as you begin to relax, something catches the old ferryman off guard. His eyes widen in fear, and with a sudden shout, he stumbles, falling hard against the side of the boat. His head strikes the wooden railing with a sickening thud, and he slumps to the deck, unconscious.

For a moment, the boat wavers—and you feel the sharp tug of the current pulling you dangerously off course.

Player Challenges:

Players must now step in to steer the Stone Current and keep it afloat as obstacles arise. Several tasks can be divided among the party members.

1. Navigating the Sound:

A player needs to grab the rudder and attempt to guide the boat.

· Consequence: On failure, the boat scrapes against rocks, taking 10 damage, and a leak begins to form (see Plug the Leak).

2. Rowing the Boat:

Another player can row to fight the shifting currents.

· Check: Strength (Athletics) DC 12 to keep the boat steady.

· Consequence: On failure, the boat drifts further off course, adding another obstacle to the journey.

3. Plug the Leak (if caused):

The boat takes on water after scraping rocks.

· Check: Dexterity (Sleight of Hand) DC 13 to stuff cloth into the cracks and slow the flooding.

· Consequence: Without successful patching, players will have to keep bailing water (Dexterity DC 10 every round)

Somehow, through luck or teamwork, you manage to keep the boat afloat and on course. As the mist begins to thin, the distant cliffs of Norwycke come into view. Though battered and soaked, you've made it—just as the old ferryman stirs with a groggy groan.

Brun squints at you, rubbing his head. "That... must've been one hell of a ride, huh?" he mutters. "Better you than me on that rudder, though."

After hours of tense sailing, the cliffs of Norwycke loom out of the fog—dark and foreboding. The harbor is eerily quiet. The lanterns hanging from weather-worn posts flicker weakly in the wind, casting long, wavering shadows on the dock.

The locals you spot seem reluctant to speak, glancing nervously toward the edge of Hurstwold Forest, which presses close against the town like a watchful beast.

Something's Not Normal in Norwycke

As the players arrive in Norwycke, the town teeters on the edge of panic, blanketed in the unsettling green growths they saw on the farmer. Tendrils coil up the sides of homes, slowly consuming walls, roofs, and pathways. A few, very few, people can be seen on the streets—vendors open stalls, fishermen haul nets—but every movement is labored, hindered by creeping vines and spreading spores that twist through doors, clog machinery, and trap livestock. The streets are nearly vacant, only a few solitary souls scrubbing, scraping, and slicing at green fungus. Yet, despite their best efforts, the green infestation grows faster than it can be removed.

In the marketplace, wooden stalls groan under the weight of vines. Green tendrils snake along cobbled paths, slowing traffic as carts get stuck or livestock become entangled. Stray animals behave strangely, avoiding the growths and circling the town's edges with anxious whines.

As they watch, a man hurriedly crosses the street, covered in a waxy substance. He cuts green growths away from the neck of his tunic with one hand, while another fetches a large glass bottle from his bag. Cutting the growths, he unstopped the bottle and pours more waxy substance around his neck. The growths seem to visibly recoil, and their growth slows to nearly a stop. He stoppers the bottle and places it back in his bag, making eye contact with the nearest player, then turning away to continue his work.

In Norwycke, the townspeople have adapted to the green growth's peculiar pattern—the fungus spreads most aggressively at twilight and just before dawn. The players have arrived just before sunset. During these hours, citizens retreat indoors. The safest times to be outside are midday and deep into the night. Inside buildings, residents rely on Greensalve to protect doorways, windows, and cracks in the floor from encroaching tendrils.

As the sun begins to dip behind the hills of Norwycke, the green tendrils writhing along the streets seem to quicken, creeping up walls and curling through cracks. Just as the players take in this unsettling sight, Oln Trevis, the innkeeper of The Bleeding Bark, spots them from across the street. He waves urgently, his voice low but tense.

"Hey! You there—get inside, quick! Twilight's coming!"

The players hear the low hum of strange growth around them, twisting and tightening as if sensing the shift in the sun's light. Oln stands at the inn's doorway, waving them in. Tendrils stretch along the ground toward the players, and Oln's frantic gestures only grow more urgent.

"If those vines get hold of you now, you'll wish you stayed on that boat!"

Once inside, Oln slams the door shut and douses the frame with a smear of waxy, greenish salve from a glass jar. The vines outside writhe against the wood but stop short of crossing the threshold. Oln sighs with relief, then turns to the players.

"You lot better have some Greensalve on you—or know where to get it. That stuff keeps the growths at bay, but it's in short supply these days. If you're out, you'd best pay a visit to Old Feddel's Apothecary—assuming there's still any left. The way things are going, even Feddel might run dry soon."

· Ask about the Greensalve: Oln reveals that Feddel's Apothecary controls the town's stock. He hints that something feels off—as if the apothecary always has just enough supply no matter how bad the infestation grows.

· Offer to help: Oln gladly accepts, mentioning that some homes ran out of salve this morning. The players might decide to assist townsfolk in getting salve or tracking its distribution.

· Inquire about the growth: Oln explains that twilight and dawn are the worst times for the growth. He advises staying indoors and only traveling at night or during the day.

Rapid Expansion

The players will need Greensalve at some point in order to survive in Norwycke and the surrounding areas.

When the players reach Feddel's Apothecary, they discover that something has gone terribly wrong. The once bustling shop stands eerily silent, its windows cracked and green tendrils creeping along the walls, as if trying to break inside. The front door is slightly ajar, rocking back and forth with the breeze, a faint smear of Greensalve visible along the door frame and along the windows—just barely holding the fungal growths at bay.

· Feddel is nowhere to be found, but there is a sign on the door that says "Out for lunch, back at midday."

· Feddel's notebook, lying on the counter, is a ledger of shipments and signatures for sales. The last sale made from the shop was the day before yesterday.

All of the entries in the ledger of shipments of Greensalve are marked with a cryptic symbol—a circle with three jagged lines, and no name or supplier contact, like the other entries have.

· Behind the counter area, a door in the floor is left open, leading to an underground storage area. Inside, half the salve supply is unboxed, the other still boxed, and the growth of the fungus is visible even here.

While the players are exploring the storage cellar below Feddel's apothecary, faint footsteps creak across the floorboards above them.

· If the players succeed on a Perception (DC 10) check, they can hear muttering in a low voice—just a few words:

"…they'll be back… must be quick…" "find the ledger…"

· Options for Action:

The players can either sneak back upstairs, confront whoever is there, or try to remain hidden to listen further. They'll catch sight of a hooded figure crouched over the counter, quickly flipping through the ledger, and writing on another scrap of paper.

· If the players interrupt, the visitor bolts for the exit, but the players catch the figure before they can escape.

· A successful Insight check (DC 12) reveals they are lying and terrified of something—

The hooded figure stumbles backward, pulling their cloak tighter. Their voice

wavers with fear and accusation:

• "Y-You're with them, aren't you? The ones spreading this cursed stuff... Thought you'd fool us, come to check if it's spreading fast enough?"

• "Did you come to make sure we stay hooked on your damned salve? We know what you're doing—spread the plague, sell the cure, and watch us crawl back for more!"

• "I saw Feddel meet with you... He's missing now, isn't he? What have you done with him?"

To convince the hooded figure they aren't the suppliers:

Here's a list of skill checks the players can attempt to convince the hooded figure they aren't connected to the Greensalve suppliers:

1. Insight (DC 10): Recognize that the hooded figure is acting out of fear rather than aggression. A calm, empathetic approach might help ease their panic.

2. Persuasion (DC 10): Appeal to the figure's sense of reason, explaining that the players are also here to investigate the strange growth and need help finding the truth.

3. Deception (DC 10): If the players pretend to have some authority over the situation (e.g., posing as investigators from the Society), they might reassure the figure enough to cooperate.

4. Investigation (DC 10): A player who analyzes the ledger and points out that they arrived only recently (after the last sale) can use it as proof that they aren't involved.

Once the supplier situation is all sorted out, the hooded figure feels a lot more comfortable with the players.

The hooded figure introduces himself as Halric (Notable Figures, pg X)

The hooded figure takes a step closer, their voice filled with bitterness:

"It's all too neat, too perfect—the problem and the solution wrapped in one dirty package. But never ENOUGH of the solution. Just enough to keep us paying. That's how they've got us by the throat."

They glance nervously at the windows, as if expecting someone to burst through. "The shipments always arrive after the growth spreads—like clockwork. And Feddel? He knew. He knew, but kept taking their money. Now he's gone of course, probably gone to save his own skin."

"If you're really not with them, listen. Feddel was meeting someone dangerous—those Greensalve shipments don't just fall out of the sky. Whoever gave it to him knew exactly what they were doing."

After the encounter with Halric in the apothecary, as the players are piecing together Halric's discoveries about the Greensalve suppliers, a distant but unmistakable rumble shakes the walls. The fungal growth around them quivers, and Halric's face goes pale as he mutters, "It's happening again."

Rushing outside, the party witnesses a chilling sight: thick waves of green fungus visibly spreading along the ground, advancing like a creeping tide. Townsfolk, recognizing the signs of an "expansion," scramble to retreat indoors, slathering Greensalve along windows and door frames in a desperate attempt to protect their homes.

As the players and Halric gather outside, the tremor intensifies, sending vibrations through the ground and buildings around them. The villagers begin to murmur nervously, their eyes fixed on the edge of town where the green fungus seems to be gathering in thick clusters.

A sudden, chilling silence falls over Norwycke as every creature, every person seems to hold their breath. Then, as if responding to an unheard signal, the green growth surges forward in a wave, faster and more aggressive than ever before. Tendrils twist and coil over each other, stretching like reaching hands as they push past the town's edge, encroaching upon the homes and shops.

Villagers scream, rushing indoors and frantically slathering Greensalve around windows and doorframes. Children are dragged inside, animals flee, and doors slam shut as the invasive green tendrils spread like a living creature, overtaking streets and alleyways.

As the fungal expansion violently surges through Norwycke, Halric and the players are separated in the chaos. Tendrils slam down between them, buildings creak under the pressure, and a thick wall of green cuts off visibility.

> Halric shouts through the rising growth, his voice distant and warped: "If you make it out—meet me at the hollow stone! Old druid marker—east edge of the Hurstwold trail!"

Then he's gone—swallowed in a blur of mist and reaching vines.

Episode 2: Creeping Death

Summary

Following the expansion wave, players investigate the origin of the fungal surge, leading them into the edge of the Hurstwold Forest. There, they find a secluded glade corrupted by vibrant but decaying magic. Embedded in the fungal blooms are bones, horns, feathers, and scales—remains of magical beings who have been drained, not killed in battle. In the shadows of twisted trees and in the crumbling ruins of a forgotten outpost, the party uncovers the first undeniable signs that the green growth is no natural phenomenon—and no accident.

Locating the Hollow Stone

The player's are trying to locate the hollow stone.

Ask Oln Trevis (innkeeper of the Bleeding Bark):

> "That hollow stone's not far, but no one walks that path anymore. Too many things growing wrong. Why would you want to go there?"

He can:

- Give the players a
- rudimentary map
- to the stone circle.
- Offer
- leftover Greensalve
- and warn it won't last forever.
- Suggest they
- travel by midday
- —the fungus is weakest then.

Search the Library or Local Records (Investigation Option)

If the players search Feddel's Apothecary or a dusty shelf in The Bleeding Bark's common room, they can uncover:

- An old surveyor's map
- with faintly marked druid sites—one circled in charcoal.
  - Investigation (DC 13)
  - to piece together that the hollow stone is aligned with leyline crossing points.
  - Arcana (DC 14)
  - reveals leyline energy may amplify or distort magic nearby.

Nature-Based Divination

If the party includes a druid, ranger, or nature-focused caster:

- Speak with Plants or Animals
- :
  - Nearby trees or moss will "remember" the stone. The stone "hums when the forest listens," but lately it's been
  - weeping green
- Druidic Marks
- :
  - Nature (DC 12)
  - or
  - Survival (DC 14)
  - uncovers
  - carved sigils on trees
  - near town, pointing toward the hollow stone.

Magical Detection

- Casting
- Detect Magic
- near Greensalve-treated areas may reveal a
- resonance pulse leading outward
- —a thread of ambient magic drawn toward the Hollow Stone, which serves as a
- magical anchor or conduit.

The Hollow Stone lies at the edge of the Deep Hurstwold, a place where the normal canopy breaks into a clearing flooded with green light, even at twilight. It rests in a liminal zone—not quite inside the most corrupted part of the forest, but touched by its breath. The air hums faintly, like a wine glass on the edge of shatter.

The clearing is accessed via a barely-visible trail marked by carved bark sigils, reachable only after a steep descent down a moss-slippery ravine and through a tunnel of arching, fungus-laced roots.

Skill check options:

- Arcana (DC 13)
- : The stone resonates like a tuning fork—it's not a portal, but a
- magical amplifier
- , tuned to ley energy.
- Religion (DC 12)
- : This is a
- watching place
- , where druids once
- communed with the Weald
- to ask permission to harvest from the forest.
- History (DC 15)
- : The glyphs match pre-Ullac resistance symbolism—this was once a
- secret meeting site

No matter how long they wait, Halric is not there.

Investigation Options

The party can explore the surrounding area:

- Perception (DC 13):
- A thin trail of broken twigs and green residue leads away from the clearing, as if someone left in a hurry.
- Survival (DC 14):
- Partial boot tracks—adult-sized, erratic—heading deeper into the Hurstwold, away from the ring. You count one set, maybe two.
- Insight (DC 10):
- Halric planned to meet you here. If he didn't show, it means something
- prevented
- him—not a betrayal, but an interruption.

Player Choices

At this point, the party faces a choice:

- Follow Halric's Trail
- (recommended):
  - This leads toward the abandoned outpost where the first Ullac extraction device was tested (next scene).
- Return to Norwycke
- :

  - Doing so risks losing Halric entirely, but allows for regrouping and rest.
- Attempt Magical Tracking
  - Locate Creature
  - ,
  - Sending
  - , or similar spells may reach Halric—if he's still alive.

The Hollow-Bound Herd

After tracking Halric's trail via Survival (DC 14) or magical means (Locate Creature, Divination, etc.), the players descend deeper into the Hurstwold. The trees grow closer, the canopy warps the light, and even the air tastes faintly of copper and ozone.

> The tracks wind toward a boggy hollow thick with ankle-deep green sludge. Strange hoofprints churn the mud—but no deer run here now. From the far side of the clearing, eyes gleam from between the trees.

Encounter: Twisted Elk

Creatures: 2–4 Spore-Touched Elks (modified Giant Elk or Dire Wolves for lower levels)

These were once normal forest guardians, now warped by prolonged exposure to magical pollution from the machine. Their bodies are overgrown with glowing fungal plates and spore-vents along the ribs. Antlers have splintered into crown-like branches.

☒ Stats (Sample for CR 2–3 party)

Use base stats of Giant Elk or Dire Wolf, with the following changes:

Spore-Touched Modifications:

- AC
- : +1 (fungal plating)
- Spore Bloom (1/day)
- : 10-ft radius burst when bloodied or killed
- •
- DC 13 Con save or be poisoned
- for 1 minute.
- • On a success, players resist the poison but are briefly disoriented (disadvantage on next attack or check).
- Aggressive Herding Instinct
- : If two elks are within 10 ft of the same target, they gain advantage on attacks against that target.
- Fungal Sensitivity
- : Vulnerable to fire and radiant damage.

Tactics

- The herd is not feral, but
- driven
- —by instinct or by a larger force.
- If one creature is bloodied and another is dead, the final elk attempts to flee (can be tracked).
- A player using
- Speak with Animals
- or
- calming magic
- (e.g.,
- Animal Friendship
-) hears a mental image:
  - Inspecting the elk corpses reveals
  - sickened organs
  - , fungal threads in brain tissue, and
  - traces of magical residue
  - consistent with leyline corruption.
  - Arcana (DC 13)
  - or
  - Medicine (DC 12)
  - confirms this is not a natural infection. It's ambient damage from proximity to a magical force pulling nature out of rhythm.
  - If tracked, the fleeing elk leads away from where Halric's trail was leading

Extraction Site

Arrival

After tracking Halric—or the fleeing elk—the party descends into a damp gully where the ground shifts underfoot like rotten sponge. Stonework juts from the forest floor, overtaken by vines and fungus. Ahead, half-buried in the slope, is the skeletal husk of a metallic outpost: rusted walls, fractured sigils, pipes that pulse green beneath layers of moss and mycelium.

Layout (for reference)

The ruined structure has three chambers, all in various states of decay:

1. Collapsed Entry Bay

2. Resonance Extraction Room

3. Holding Cell / Drainage Pit

☒ 1. Collapsed Entry Bay

This space has crumbled ceilings and fungal growth erupting from cracks in the stone. You can hear someone yelling for help from inside.

- Investigation (DC 12):
- Players find
- drag marks
- —Halric was pulled through here, unconscious or resisting.

- Arcana (DC 13):
- Lingering traces of teleportation or forced resonance manipulation.
- Obstacle
- : A thick fungal wall (10 ft wide) blocks access deeper inside.
  - Can be burned (fire), dispelled (radiant), or bypassed with
  - resonance tuning
  - (see below).

☒ 2. Resonance Extraction Room

This chamber is the corrupted heart of the site. Rusted scaffolding surrounds a central plinth where magical creatures were once bound and drained. The yelling for help is louder here.

> A wide, low platform of dull metal gleams faintly. Coiled tubes hang like veins from the ceiling, some still dripping ichor.

- In the corner
- , a shattered
- crystal resonance chamber
- is scorched from within—someone (Halric?) tried to destroy it.

Interactions

- Arcana (DC 14):
- The machine fed on magical biology—horns, feathers, wings—to distill raw essence. This machine is powered by the tissue of living magical creatures.
- Medicine (DC 13):
- Fungal overgrowth here mimics
- nerve tissue
- —as if the structure itself has become semi-living.
- Religion or Nature (DC 15):
- Using druidic energy here creates feedback—
- the Weald is actively resisting this place.

☒ 3. Holding Cell / Drainage Pit

A small antechamber houses a rusted cell, its bars bent outward. The stone beneath is cracked, and a slick green fluid runs down into a dark hole at the back.

- Inside the cell
- is the shredded remains of a magical creature—likely a dryad or unicorn—its essence long drained. And Halric, beaten badly but relieved to see you.
- A broken piece of crystal
- lies embedded in the corpse.

Optional Encounter

A Sporebound Husk (CR 2–3 solo undead/mutant) shambles from the drainage hole if disturbed:

- Once a worker or failed test subject, now fused with fungal growth.
- Abilities

- : Necrotic burst on death, grapple with fungal vines, can mimic voices.

☒ How to Disable the Ullac Extraction Machine

☒ Method 1: Overload the Leyline Conduit

Arcane Detonation

The machine is still connected to local leyline currents. Overloading it with too much raw magical input causes a feedback loop that collapses the arcane circuitry.

How:

- Cast
- multiple high-level spells
- into the crystal resonance core (e.g.,
- Dispel Magic
- ,
- Shatter
- , or
- Lightning Bolt
-) OR channel a
- magic item's energy
- into the control glyphs.
- Arcana (DC 15)
- reveals this possibility during inspection.
- Optional: Locate a
- resonance node override panel
- hidden beneath the plinth (Investigation DC 14).

Consequence:

- Violent backlash:
- shockwave knocks everyone prone
- , minor damage (e.g., 2d6 force).
- All remaining energy pulses into the forest—
- a brief spike in green growth
- , followed by collapse and stillness.
- Nearby fungal creatures become erratic or feral
- for the next hour.

☒ Method 2: Burn the Heart

Destroy the Ichor Core

A visible chamber beneath the platform contains pulsing green ichor, sustained by semi-living tissues. If fire or radiant magic is used directly on the ichor, the parasite can be destroyed.

How:

- Crawl into the core chamber (requires
- Athletics DC 12
- or
- Dexterity DC 14
- to squeeze in).

- Apply
- fire damage
- , or pour in radiant-infused liquid (like holy water, a sunbeam vial, etc.).
- A
- Nature (DC 13)
- or
- Medicine (DC 15)
- check confirms that the ichor mimics fungal reproduction tissue—
- it can be sterilized

Consequence:

- Permanent shutdown.
- However,
- a poisonous fog vents from the cracked tubing
- —the area becomes hazardous unless players act quickly to evacuate.
- The burned ichor
- taints the soil
- —that patch of forest dies, leaving a
- scarred, grey clearing

☒ Method 3: Offer a Resonant Sacrifice

Ritual Unbinding

The machine is sustained by a binding glyph loop using druidic and arcane weave. It can be unraveled by completing the binding backwards—but only with a living source of magical resonance as a catalyst.

How:

- Discover the original activation glyphs (Religion or Arcana DC 16).
- Cast
- Remove Curse
- ,
- Greater Restoration
- , or
- Dispel Magic
- at the glyphs while someone
- channels attuned magic
- into the stone circle (e.g., a druid using Wild Shape, or a sorcerer sacrificing sorcery points).

Consequence:

- The growth halts
- completely
- , and the land breathes again.
- The character acting as the conduit is permanently affected
- :

- Loses a spell slot permanently.
- Takes a mutation (e.g., bark-skin veins, moss hair, one glowing eye).

☒ Optional Clue Delivery

- Hidden logs in the holding cell describe
- early containment attempts
- and
- failed overrides
- .
- A broken researcher journal in the crystal chamber has - ritual sketches and leyline maps
- .
- A faint ghost-memory (flavor scene, no mechanics) can show a test subject being overloaded and the effect it had on the growth.

Clues and Evidence

By the end of this scene, the players should have discovered:

- Some mysterious and powerful organization
- designed this machine
- to harvest raw magic.
- The machine's use
- left behind unstable, parasitic energy
- , which
- feeds the green growth
- now infecting the forest.
- The site was
- abandoned but not inactive
- —leyline currents keep some systems passively charged.

☒ Resolution: The Aftermath of the Machine

Once the machine is disabled (by any of the three methods), the entire ruin groans as though exhaling. The green pulse in the pipes flickers, then fades. Somewhere deep beneath the forest, an echo of that same pulse trembles outward—and dies.

Visuals and Effects (Based on Player Action)

- Overload (Arcane Detonation)
- :
- Burn the Heart (Sterilization)
- :
- Ritual Unbinding (Resonant Sacrifice)

Halric's Condition

Halric, if rescued, is bruised and burned from magical backlash. He can walk with assistance, but he is rattled.

He insists they take the broken crystal embedded in the corpse—it contains a residual arcane signature that can be used to trace other machines if studied by the right people.

Clues for the Next Episode
Players find:

- A coded map
- in the research logs, showing
- multiple testing locations
- deeper in the Hurstwold.
- A symbol of the Ullac Regime
- , burned into a steel plate—proof they're still active.
- A name
- in a damaged journal entry:
- "Ardella Lentris"
- marked as
- "project overseer"

Episode 3: The Machine Dreams Still

Summary

☒ End of Episode 2: Decision Point
After disabling the Ullac extraction machine and rescuing Halric, the party discovers:

- Proof that
- Ardella Lentris
- , a respected field coordinator from the
- Holmean Magical Creature Society
- , was overseeing the site.
- Evidence that the machine's purpose is not accidental—it's part of a - deliberate, organized effort

☒ Player Choices
Option 1: ☒ Confront Ardella Directly

"She needs to answer for this."

What it means:

- The party chooses to
- seek out Ardella immediately
- —through diplomatic channels, magical tracking, or by heading to the next extraction site to cut her off.
- This is the
- bold, justice-forward
- path. Risky, fast, and dramatic.

Leads into:

- A chase structure
- in Episode 3, possibly intercepting her or her agents at the next site.
- Potential combat encounter with
- loyalists or mercenaries
- protecting her.

- Possibly catching a
- partial confession
- —enough to use, but not the whole truth.

Option 2: ☒ Contact the HMCS

> "The Society needs to know what's happening inside its own walls."
> What it means:

- Players believe in the HMCS and choose to
- alert high-level members
- —possibly sending Halric or a messenger while they continue forward.
- This is the
- institutionalist path
- —hoping to
- rally allies, reveal the corruption
- , and turn the tide from within.

> Leads into:

- A slower Episode 3 start, but one that opens doors:
  - Messages from allies
  - Coded responses
  - Possibility of
  - inter-organizational aid
  - , a base of operations, or new equipment.
- A developing subplot:
- Is there someone else in the HMCS they can trust?

Option 3: ☒ Go Alone, Deeper Into the Hurstwold

> "We can't afford to stop. Not yet."
> What it means:

- The party chooses to
- continue pursuing the map of extraction sites
- , hoping to
- gather more evidence
- before tipping their hand.
- This is the
- rogue investigation path
- —prioritizing
- exposure over confrontation.

> Leads into:

- Discovery of
- a larger, operational extraction site
- in Episode 3.
- The
- first glimpse of the cabal's true nature
- —a sigil, a named agent, or a ritual in progress.
- Greater personal danger, but deeper knowledge gained.

☒ DM Guidance: Let the Players Split the Response

- They might
- send Halric
- back to alert HMCS while continuing alone.
- They might
- try to magically contact
- a trusted Society figure.
- They might
- plan to confront Ardella
- , but discover she's already several steps ahead.

Each option is valid and should lead into a custom Episode 3 hook based on their choice.

Trail of Ash

☒ Episode Entry: Modular Setup

Use the following to determine how the players arrive at this episode's events:

☒ IF the players chose to Confront Ardella Directly:

Halric confirms her last known location matches the next extraction site on the coded map. The party follows her trail west through the Hurstwold, reaching a burned scouting camp and a shattered beacon post.

Proceed to Scene 1A: Burned Camp

☒ IF the players chose to Contact the HMCS:

After sending evidence and a copy of the coded map to the Society via Halric, the players receive a magically encrypted reply. A field agent named Thalen Dorr confirms suspicions about Ardella and relays her likely destination.

Proceed to Scene 1B: Message in the Flame

☒ IF the players chose to Investigate Alone:

Traveling deeper into the Hurstwold using the map, the players encounter traces of an abandoned forward camp and leyline disturbance patterns that > mirror the ruined machine site.

> Proceed to Scene 1C: Unquiet Trees

☒ Scene 1A: Burned Camp

> "The trees here haven't just burned—they've bled. The ash smells like old spellfire, and the ground is littered with torn Society field kits."

- Investigation (DC 13):
- Find a branded Society tool case—but the sigil is wrong. It's not the HMCS, but a
- forged version
- using distorted script.
- Arcana (DC 14):
- Trace of a teleportation circle—destabilized and burnt out.
- Survival (DC 12):
- Discover tracks leading north toward an
- overgrown ravine
- —a shortcut to the next site.

☒ Optional Combat:
Two Sporefang Stalkers—feral fey-beasts bred to track intruders.
(Use Shadow Mastiff stats with poison instead of fear.)

☒ Scene 1B: Message in the Flame

> "As the campfire burns low, an ember rises unnaturally and spins in the air. A voice—clear, deliberate—emerges from the heat."

- This is Thalen Dorr
- , HMCS internal affairs mage. The message confirms:
  - Ardella has been under investigation in the past.
  - Thalen begs the players:
  - "Find proof. We'll act if we can—but we need something irrefutable."

    ☒ Reward:
- HMCS-Sanctioned Tracker Charm
- (Advantage on Survival when following known magical signature)
- Party is now being
- watched

- —NPC society watchers may appear later.

☒ Scene 1C: Unquiet Trees

> "The wind stops. The leaves hang, frozen. Then one falls—but instead of landing, it spins in place, caught in invisible breath."

- A corrupted
- leyline wellspring
- sits beneath a tree, pulsing with quiet resonance.
- Detect Magic:
- Reveals a flickering arcane trail, like static in the weave.
- Nature (DC 14):
- The trail leads to an unnaturally fast-growing fungal spire—
- a signal post
- used by Ardella's handlers.
  - ☒ Inside the spire:
- Fragments of messages—
- code names, a schedule, an emblem
- carved into the bark: a stylized
- eye inside a spiral

☒ Shared Scene: Crossroads of Smoke

Regardless of entry, all stories reach the same encounter:

> "The trail tightens through a ravine choked in fungal haze. Light bends wrong here—refracted, smeared. And ahead… a figure. Cloaked, staff in hand. Watching."

The players meet Ilgen Durn, a soft-spoken elven ex-Society scholar who once served with Ardella. He warns:

- Mysterious figures are heading for the
- Vault of Ashroot
- , an ancient leyline convergence site hidden under the Weald's roots.
- Ilgen offers aid
- only if the players commit to stopping the energy bleed into the forest:
  - ☒ Ilgen's Gift:
- A

- Resonance Disruptor Rod
- – usable 1/day to
- interrupt any machine’s pulse
- for 10 seconds (enough to break a ritual or free a creature).

Vault of Ashroot

Description

> The Hurstwold deepens—canopy thick as woven iron, air heavy with moss rot and static tension. The forest opens not upward, but down—revealing a spiral fissure lined with root-bridges and fungal shelves. At the bottom: the Vault of Ashroot.

A sunken ruin, overgrown and humming with ley-resonance. What was once a druidic convergence temple is now corrupted by a modified extraction device, buried into its core like a tumor in a heart.

Exploration Zones

☒ 1. Vault Entrance

- Roots spiral down into a hollow dome
- , half-ruined, slick with bioluminescent fungal runoff.
- Perception (DC 13):
- Hear the distant whine of a machine pulsing with rhythmic energy—like slow breath.
- Arcana (DC 12):
- Trace lines of raw ley energy, pulled
- against their natural flow
- into the center chamber.

☒ 2. Outer Ring Chambers

- Ruined chambers used long ago for
- druidic rites
- —now repurposed.
- Players may discover:
  - ☒
  - A map
  - of extraction networks.
  - ☒
  - Memory fungus
  - that replays echoes of rituals once held here (flavor vision).
  - ☒ A
  - spent summoning circle

- , burned out and twisted.

> Optional Encounter:
> Echoform Beasts – creatures that have bled partially into this reality from the resonance pull (use Phase Spider stat block, reflavored with fungal-magic effects).

At the Vault's Heart

> "A crystal spire rises where the old altar once stood, wrapped in metal tubing and humming green energy. Inside its glass: a massive pulsing creature—too warped to name—being drained of essence."

This is the Threshold Machine—larger, more refined, and actively testing portal mechanics. It is not just drawing magic—it is testing boundaries between places. It is utilizing resonance to open a new rift to Nebernoria.

☒ Choices / Interactions
Players may attempt:

- Shut it down
- (Resonance Disruptor Rod helps here)
- Study it
- (Arcana DC 16 reveals it's
- trying to form a "resonance bridge"
- to somewhere else)
- Free the creature
- (Risky—may trigger machine instability)

☒ Optional Intel

- One of the machine terminals contains a
- holograph-style memory recording
- of Ardella:

> "Vessel Threshold Engine, target Coordinate: NBNR-Ax13. Begin parallel tests at Vaults 5 and 7.

> Tell the Ullac: Threshold viability is above 83%."

- If decoded, this reveals:
  - Ardella is no longer concerned with creatures—she's using them as jump-starts for
  - perpetual magical extraction

☒ Scene 4: Confrontation – Not Ardella… Yet

As the players make a decision, they're not alone. A new figure enters—an Ullac Agent, masked and cloaked.

> Footsteps echo across the stone. A figure in bone-plated robes and fungal-threaded gloves steps forward. Their mask bears the Spiral's eye sigil, carved into a steel plate. Their voice distorts slightly, like they're speaking through resonance.

> "It's always the same. You see what we're building and try to smash it. But smashing the machine won't unmake the need for it. You'll see."

Combat Option:

- Ullac Agent + 2 Echoform Beasts
- (Agent uses Warlock/Necromancer build with portal magic and voice mimicry)

☒ End of Episode 3: The Door Opens

During or after the fight, the Threshold Machine activates briefly, creating a stable portal for 3 seconds. What's on the other side is hard to perceive—but it's not this world.

If not stopped, the machine attempts a full bridge test in 72 hours. A full success could mean a new rift to Nebernoria, and catastrophic magical consequences.

☒ Episode Rewards

- Ley-anchored Resonance Core
- (used to track machine tests)
- Whispervine Charm

- (lets players send 1-way messages through the Weald to known allies)
- First clear symbol of the Ullac Regime's return

Story Summary & Next Steps

☒ What the Players Might Do Next

Present the players with these options as rumors, messages, or decision points in the aftermath of the Vault encounter:

☒ OPTION 1: Send Evidence to the Holmean Magical Creature Society

"The Society needs to know what's being done in its name."

- Players may send encoded messages, fragments of glyphwork, or even the resonance logs.
- If done quickly, the Society may send
- reinforcements or institutional support
- by Episode 5.
- Thalen Dorr may respond with new intel or request an in-person meeting.

☒ Recommended if the players value justice, institutional change, or rallying allies.

☒ OPTION 2: Track Ardella Directly

"If we stop her, the whole thing falls apart."

- The coded map shows a second active Vault site—
- Vault 7
- —farther east, near the collapsed ley crater of Duskwither.
- Ilgen Durn offers to guide them part of the way, but won't go farther.
- Tracking her immediately may let them
- intercept the next test or confront her
- before the Spiral completes their calibrations.

☒ Recommended if the players want a high-risk, high-reward pursuit arc.

☒ OPTION 3: Sabotage the Remaining Machines One by One

"We can't fight them head on. But we can unravel their foundation."

- The players may strike from the shadows, using the map to find
- Vaults 5 and 7
- , dismantling them before Ardella reaches them.
- This may draw the Spiral's attention and paint targets on their backs.
- However, successful sabotage may
- slow or permanently destabilize the Rift geometry

☒ Recommended if players favor tactical resistance, secrecy, or long-game disruption.

A Detailed History

The Ullac Regime

The Ullac Regime emerged in the aftermath of the Torgarian War, during a time when Ryndor was fractured and vulnerable. With the fall of the Sev'rinn royal family and much of the realm in disarray, power-hungry factions vied for control. Into this chaos stepped Knute Shun-Rote, who sought to restore order by establishing the Ullac Regime, named for "law and discipline."

Initially, the regime was welcomed as a stabilizing force. Knute and his allies promised security through rigid governance, instituting a bureaucratic system that emphasized law, punishment, and taxation. However, as the regime consolidated power, it grew increasingly authoritarian, expanding its influence over every aspect of Ryndorian life. The regime outlawed unsanctioned magic, seeing it as a threat to order. Magical practitioners, especially Sev'rinns, were forced into hiding or pressed into service under strict control.

The Ullac Regime's strength lay in technology and discipline. Utilizing advancements in anti-magical technology and surveillance, the regime created a militarized state that curtailed magic use and crushed dissent. Political rivals were swiftly dealt with, either through exile or execution, and the regime's network of nullification engines and automaton sentinels ensured there were few safe havens for those who resisted.

Despite its authoritarian nature, the Ullac Regime expanded trade and infrastructure, gaining support from wealthy merchants and cities like Ban Mynydd that thrived under the regime's rule. However, these advances came at the cost of personal freedom, and over time, discontent simmered among the magical population. What began as a necessary order following war soon evolved into a system of oppression, setting the stage for the eventual Sev'rinn rebellion.

The Ullac Regime's Treatment of Magical Creatures and Peoples

The Ullac Regime viewed magical creatures and practitioners not as individuals but as potential threats to the state's rigid control. The regime enacted policies of strict containment and exploitation, regulating all magic-related beings.

Magical practitioners, including Sev'rinns, were forced to register with the regime and were either pressed into servitude or imprisoned within nullification zones, where their powers were neutralized. Those who refused were branded traitors and hunted by automaton sentinels.

Magical creatures fared no better. Beasts such as elementals and minor drakes were either enslaved for industrial use or exterminated. Wyrmbost's smaller drakes were captured to aid mining operations, their fire harnessed to power machinery. In other cases, creatures considered too dangerous or untamable were eradicated outright.

The regime's policies also extended to the severance of ancestral bonds—many Sev'rinns were stripped of their heritage, forbidden to practice rites or rituals tied to their magic. This cultural suppression aimed to disconnect magical beings from their identities, reducing them to tools for the regime's war machine. The result was a population suffused with fear and resentment, leading to the first whispers of rebellion that would eventually ignite the War of the Sev'rinns.

The Technological Marvels of the Ullac Regime

The Ullac Regime maintained dominance over the magical population of Ryndor through a combination of cutting-edge technology and ruthless control. While Sev'rinn magic relied on personal mastery, the regime's technological infrastructure was designed to be efficient, scalable, and brutally precise. Their innovations neutralized magical threats, curtailed rebellion, and allowed them to exert control over vast regions with minimal resistance.

1. Nullification Engines

- The regime developed nullification engines, enormous devices capable of creating anti-magical fields that could suppress magical abilities within a defined radius. These engines were installed in key cities like Eveltoft and mounted on airships, rendering magical attacks useless during battle.

2. Automaton Sentinels

- Automaton Sentinels, mechanical soldiers powered by arcane cores, patrolled the streets and guarded regime strongholds. These constructs were immune to magical influences, making them ideal for tracking and capturing rogue Sev'rinns. Some were enhanced with combat modules capable of detecting even the faintest traces of magical energy.

3. Precision Arc-Weapons

- The Ullac Regime's arc-weapons used energy harnessed from crystalized rift artifacts. These weapons could fire concentrated bursts of magical energy in controlled forms—either lethal bolts of lightning or disruptive waves that disoriented spellcasters. In combination with nullification fields, these weapons ensured battlefield superiority over magical forces.

4. Skyfleet: Airship Armada

- The regime maintained an armada of airships, allowing them to quickly deploy forces across Ryndor. Some of these ships carried arcane dampeners that extended nullification zones into enemy territory. Others served as flying prisons, where captured Sev'rinns were shackled in enchanted cells designed to drain their powers.

5. Surveillance Infrastructure

- The regime used scrying orbs and observation towers, powered by enchanted machinery, to monitor rebel movements. A vast surveillance network covered Ryndor's cities and wilderness, tracking suspected dissidents and predicting rebel strategies. This infrastructure gave the Ullac forces a tactical advantage, as they were often able to intercept rebel plans before they were carried out.

6. Rift-Enhanced Constructs

- The most dangerous innovation came from experiments with artifacts from the Nebernorian Rift. These artifacts powered experimental constructs—monstrous hybrids of technology and magic that acted as living weapons. Although volatile and unpredictable, these constructs were unleashed in battles to devastating effect, demoralizing rebel forces and leaving ruin in their wake.

The Ullac Regime's technological supremacy gave it the edge needed to control both magic and its practitioners, creating an overwhelming presence that stifled resistance for decades. Their reliance on machines and surveillance, however, made them blind to the subtleties of the Sev'rinn rebellion. As the rebels adapted, exploiting the regime's rigidity and weaknesses, the tide of the war began to turn—though not without great sacrifice.

The Ullac Regime's Harvest Technology: Recycling Life into Power

The Ullac Regime pushed its control beyond mere suppression, developing grim technologies powered by the harvest of magical creatures and practitioners. These machines, known as Arcane Recycling Engines, extracted vital elements from magical beings and repurposed them to fuel the regime's war machine. The process was both brutal and efficient, transforming living magic into raw energy.

- Unicorn horns, symbols of purity, were ground into powder and used in alchemical engines to stabilize nullification fields.

- Ember stones—crystals formed in the hearts of dragons—were extracted post-mortem to power arc-weapons and airships. These stones produced immense heat, making them invaluable for industry and combat.

- The blood of Sev'rinns, rich with magical potential, was distilled into potions and combat serums. Regime soldiers injected themselves with this substance to gain temporary magical resistance or heightened abilities during battle.

Captured Sev'rinns and magical creatures were imprisoned in draining chambers, where their life force was slowly siphoned and converted into raw energy. These machines, eerily precise, ensured nothing went to waste. Once drained of vitality, the remnants of these beings were either discarded or burned, fueling the regime's conquest while snuffing out magical resistance.

This brutal cycle of harvesting and exploitation became a hallmark of the regime's technological supremacy. Entire ecosystems of magical beings were devastated, while the regime's weapons and engines hummed with stolen power. These atrocities not only fed the war effort but also drove many neutral factions—including the Keepers of the Rift—to align with the Sev'rinn rebellion, disgusted by the regime's desecration of life and magic.

War of the Sev'rinns

Timeline of the War of the Sev'rinns

1. The Seed of Rebellion (Year 0-2)

- Riven Trug and Ophelia establish Holmea as a stronghold for magical refugees, rallying allies to resist the Ullac Regime. Smugglers, scholars, and underground guilds pledge support, laying the foundation for the rebellion.

---

2. Formation of Rebel Alliances (Year 3-5)

- Riven unites splintered factions, forging uneasy truces between merchants in Surreymouth, rogue miners from Ban Mynydd, and disillusioned nobles from Eveltoft. The Keepers of the Rift begin secret negotiations with the rebels.

3. The Rift's Appearance: A Turning Point (Year 6-7)

- The appearance of the Rift to Nebernoria in Eveltoft devastates morale within the Ullac Regime. Immune to the regime's nullification fields, the Rift proves the limits of the regime's technology. Astral storms and strange creatures spill into Ryndor, spreading fear and chaos among both sides. Many regime soldiers desert, realizing that their antimagic weapons are useless against the new threat.

4. The Siege of Eveltoft (Year 7-8)

- Emboldened by the Rift's arrival and the regime's faltering control, the rebels launch a full assault on Eveltoft. With support from Wyrmbost's drakes and Mt. Bannockwyrm's elder dragons, the siege becomes a symbol of the rebellion's rising strength. Despite internal disputes, Ophelia's leadership holds the movement together.

5. The Rift Crisis and the Nebernorian Turn (Year 9)

- The regime's attempts to weaponize artifacts from the Rift backfire, unleashing astral anomalies across the battlefield. With the Keepers of the Rift now allied with the rebellion, the astral incursions are sealed, preventing further disaster.

6. The Fall of the Ullac Regime and the Rise of the Keepers (Year 10)

- The Ullac Regime collapses under the combined weight of internal rebellion and external astral threats. The Nebernorian Accord is formalized, evolving into the Keepers of the Rift, who take up the dual task of safeguarding the Rift and ensuring that the horrors of the regime's technology are never repeated.

The appearance of the Rift marked a pivotal shift in the war, showing the limits of technology and ushering in the fall of the Ullac Regime, as fear of the unknown shattered their authority and emboldened the Sev'rinn rebellion.

The Seed of Rebellion on Holmea

Holmea, with its towering cliffs and perpetual mists, became the perfect refuge for those seeking to escape the oppressive grip of the Ullac Regime. It was here, far from the reach of prying eyes, that Riven Trug—descendant of Ysilpak Trug—established a stronghold for magical practitioners and the exiled descendants of Torgar Shun-Rote. Riven envisioned more than just a sanctuary; he sought to build a place where magic could flourish once more, free from the restrictions imposed by the regime.

Holmea quickly became a hub for rebels and outcasts, attracting those who refused to abandon their magical heritage. Wizards, alchemists, and Sev'rinns of every lineage gathered under Riven's banner, weaving together old traditions with new astral knowledge gleaned from artifacts brought through the Rift. It was during this time that Riven Trug met Ophelia, a powerful Sev'rinn from the bloodline of Celestia Tenk. Ophelia's charisma and mystical insight captivated Riven, and the two formed a bond that would shape the future of the rebellion.

Ophelia had experienced firsthand the regime's oppression and spoke not only of revolution but of renewal—a vision of a world where magic could thrive in harmony with order. Recognizing her potential as a leader, Riven entrusted her with the mantle of Praetor Oracle, making her the symbolic heart of the movement. As Ophelia took on this role, she began to develop the philosophical foundation of the rebellion, emphasizing the importance of balance—both within magic and among the fractured factions of Ryndor.

Together, Riven and Ophelia transformed Holmea from a haven into a thriving rebel stronghold. The pair organized the first Council of Holmea, uniting disparate magical factions under a single cause.

From Holmea, they coordinated covert missions across Ryndor, smuggling supplies and spreading word of the rebellion. It was within the halls of Holmea's hidden libraries and enchanted forges that many of the tools and spells used in the rebellion were crafted, blending ancient Sev'rinn magic with astral innovations.

The alliance between Riven and Ophelia solidified the rebellion's purpose, setting the stage for a movement that was not merely about survival but about reclaiming the right to exist freely and powerfully. With Holmea as their sanctuary and Ophelia as their figurehead, the rebellion's leaders began to weave a strategy that would challenge the Ullac Regime's dominance and restore the pride of the Sev'rinn bloodlines.

Allies of the Rebellion: Political Maneuvers and Covert Operation

As the seeds of rebellion took root on Holmea, Riven Trug and Ophelia forged critical alliances across Ryndor, employing both diplomacy and subterfuge to strengthen their movement. These alliances extended beyond magic users, drawing in merchants, scholars, rogue operatives, and sympathetic nobles who sought to undermine the Ullac Regime's oppressive control.

Political Allies and Merchant Networks

- Surreymouth's merchants were the first to pledge support. Riven promised them protection from the regime's crippling taxes in exchange for supplies and discreet transport routes. The merchants established covert trade networks, funneling food, weapons, and magical artifacts from coastal cities to Holmea.

- Ophelia's influence reached Eveltoft's council chambers, where disgruntled officials began leaking vital intelligence to the rebels. Although some nobles acted out of self-preservation rather than idealism, these betrayals provided the rebels with key insights into the regime's weaknesses.

Covert Operations and Underground Guilds

- In the shadowy alleys of Ban Mynydd, Riven cultivated relationships with smugglers and thieves' guilds, using their expertise to move people and artifacts through hidden channels. These alliances proved invaluable, especially when the regime began clamping down on public dissent.

- A faction of renegade Sev'rinns, exiled from the regime's favor, joined the movement. They established secret cells within urban centers, conducting sabotage missions to disrupt the regime's supply lines and infrastructure.

The First Battles: Skirmishes and Resistance

- Early confrontations erupted along the roads between Ban Mynydd and Eveltoft. Small bands of rebels ambushed regime caravans, seizing resources and spreading fear among the Ullac troops. Though these skirmishes were minor, they marked the beginning of a campaign to destabilize the regime's control over trade and transportation.

- Riven and Ophelia coordinated these operations from Holmea, using enchanted scrying orbs to communicate across vast distances. This allowed them to strike swiftly and retreat, keeping the regime off balance.

Diplomatic Maneuvers and Fragmented Loyalties

- The rebellion faced challenges in maintaining unity. Riven's efforts to unify smugglers and noble sympathizers were often at odds with Ophelia's desire to maintain a clear moral vision for the movement. Yet, through deft diplomacy, Riven ensured that ideological differences did not tear the alliance apart.

- Meanwhile, the rebels reached out to the Keepers of the Rift, who remained neutral at the outset. Though reluctant, some Keepers began to share knowledge about Nebernoria with the rebels, intrigued by Ophelia's vision of a world where astral magic could coexist with mortal rule.

The Turning Point: Holmea as the Nexus

- Holmea evolved into both a strategic headquarters and a symbol of hope for the rebellion. The island's workshops produced enchanted weapons, while its archives became a repository of magical knowledge recovered from Nebernoria. Political alliances deepened, as Ophelia and Riven pledged that Holmea would serve as the heart of a new, liberated Ryndor, where magic would thrive beyond the regime's reach.

These early alliances and operations formed the backbone of the rebellion, setting the stage for larger battles to come. Every covert deal and small victory brought them closer to their ultimate goal—the fall of the Ullac Regime and the restoration of the Sev'rinn legacy.

The Alliance of Dragons: From Wyrmbost to Mt. Bannockwyrm

In the early days of the rebellion, Wyrmbost, known for breeding smaller drakes, proved a valuable ally. These agile, fiery creatures served as scouts and couriers for the rebels, delivering messages and performing hit-and-run strikes on regime supply lines. However, Riven and Ophelia recognized that these drakes alone would not be enough to shift the tide of the war.

It was through the trainers and beastmasters of Wyrmbost that the rebels learned of the ancient dragons of Mt. Bannockwyrm, enormous and reclusive creatures whose power had remained untapped for centuries. At first, attempts to contact the larger dragons were met with silence, for the dragons of Bannockwyrm did not concern themselves with mortal conflicts. Yet Riven knew that if these dragons joined the cause, their sheer might could tip the balance of power.

Ophelia, wielding her knowledge of both astral magic and ancient Sev'rinn lore, embarked on a diplomatic mission to Bannockwyrm. Accompanied by a group of Wyrmbost beastmasters and several trusted rebel emissaries, she journeyed deep into the volcanic caves of the mountain. There, the oldest and fiercest dragon, Xyntheras, demanded not wealth but purpose—a reason to fight beyond mere human squabbles.

Ophelia's vision of balance between magic and mortal life resonated with the elder dragons, who saw the Ullac Regime as a threat to both freedom and the natural order. She made a pact with Xyntheras and his brood, vowing that their ancient wisdom would be honored and their domains protected in the new Ryndor. In return, the dragons of Bannockwyrm pledged their strength to the rebellion, acting as powerful allies during pivotal battles, laying waste to the regime's fortresses, and instilling fear in its armies.

The alliance between the smaller drakes of Wyrmbost and the massive dragons of Bannockwyrm became a symbol of the rebellion's unity—melding swift, guerrilla tactics with overwhelming force. It was this partnership that would ultimately enable the rebels to achieve decisive victories, bringing the dream of a liberated Ryndor ever closer to reality.

The Heroes Who Brought Down the Ullac Regime: Targeting Technology in Eveltoft

In the final days of the war, rebel factions launched daring missions to sabotage the Ullac Regime's technological infrastructure in Eveltoft, striking at the heart of its control. These efforts came at great cost, with many operatives giving their lives to ensure the regime's fall.

The Shadow Circuit – A group of rogue engineers and artificers from Ban Mynydd, the Shadow Circuit infiltrated the regime's nullification engines. They overloaded key systems, disabling the anti-magic fields around Eveltoft, giving magical forces a chance to push forward. Their final mission ended in tragedy, as they detonated the engines with themselves still inside to prevent repairs.

The Crimson Fangs – A mercenary band aligned with Wyrmbost, the Crimson Fangs struck the surveillance towers controlling the regime's scrying network. Under Ophelia's orders, they diverted attention from Holmea, drawing the regime's forces into costly street battles. Outnumbered and surrounded, the Fangs fought to the last man, ensuring the rebellion's secrecy until the final siege.

The Keepers of the Rift – Though initially neutral, the Keepers turned against the regime after witnessing the horrors of harvest technology. A covert strike team of Keepers stormed the arcane research facilities, destroying experimental constructs powered by Sev'rinn blood and preventing the deployment of new weapons. Their leader, Elder Marlowe, sacrificed himself by triggering a magical collapse within the facility to seal the laboratories forever.

The Emberborn Saboteurs – A group of rebellious drake riders from Wyrmbost, these saboteurs attacked the airship docks in Eveltoft. Using their swift mounts, they set fire to the regime's skyfleet before it could be deployed, though many were captured and executed. Their sacrifice ensured that no regime airships would escape to rally reinforcements.

These heroic sacrifices paved the way for the final assault on Eveltoft, crippling the regime's ability to respond and giving the rebellion its decisive victory. Their names became legend, honored by the Keepers and the new Ryndor, as a reminder that freedom was won through courage, cunning, and sacrifice.

Spells

New Spells of Ryndor

Magic in a World Twisted by the Weirding

The Weirding did not simply change the world—it rewrote its rules. The leylines thrum with unstable resonance, old gods whisper through forgotten roots, and spells once thought impossible now flicker into being across the scarred land of Ryndor. In this chapter, you'll discover new spells forged in the aftermath of unraveling reality—gifts of the Rift, echoes of ancient magic, and tools born of desperation and adaptation.

Devour Life

Devour Life

3rd-level necromancy

Casting Time: 1 action

Range: 60 feet

Components: V, S

Duration: Instantaneous

You call upon the Many-Mouthed Mother's hunger to consume a fragment of a creature's essence. Choose one creature you can see within range. That creature must make a Constitution saving throw. On a failed save, the target takes 6d10 necrotic damage, and you regain hit points equal to half the damage dealt. On a successful save, the target takes half as much damage and you gain no healing.

If this damage reduces the target to 0 hit points, its body withers and caves inward, its features partially devoured by an unseen force. You immediately gain temporary hit points equal to your Warlock level + your Charisma modifier, and the area where the creature died becomes tainted by the Weirding—strange whispers, shifting shadows, or other minor sensory effects persist there for 1 minute.

At Higher Levels. When you cast this spell using a spell slot of 4th level or higher, the damage increases by 1d10 for each slot level above 3rd.

Special for the Many-Mouthed Mother Patron:
When you cast Devour Life, you may choose to whisper a truth to the dying target as part of the spell. If the creature can understand language, it hears a psychic message only it can perceive—either a memory, a secret, or a prophecy tied to the Weirding. This does not prevent the damage but may have narrative effects at your DM's discretion.
Wall of Mouths

Wall of Mouths
4th-level conjuration
Casting Time: 1 action
Range: 60 feet
Components: V, S, M (a scrap of raw meat and a pinch of salt)
Duration: Concentration, up to 1 minute

You conjure a writhing barrier of chattering, gnashing mouths in a 60-foot-long, 10-foot-high wall that is 1 foot thick. The wall appears at a point you choose within range and lasts for the duration. The wall is difficult terrain and lightly obscures sight.

Each mouth on the wall whispers curses, hungers aloud, or laughs mockingly, creating a maddening chorus that unsettles the mind and body alike.

When a creature starts its turn within 10 feet of the wall or moves into it for the first time on a turn, it must make a Wisdom saving throw. On a failed save, the creature takes 4d6 psychic damage and has disadvantage on the next attack roll or ability check it makes before the end of its next turn. On a successful save, it takes half damage and suffers no additional effects.

Creatures that move through the wall must also make a Dexterity saving throw or take 3d8 slashing damage from the biting mouths. This happens in addition to the psychic damage if both triggers apply.

At Higher Levels. When you cast this spell using a spell slot of 5th level or higher, the psychic damage increases by 1d6 and the slashing damage by 1d8 for each slot level above 4th.

Flavor Notes for Ryndor:

- In Weird Zones, the wall may mimic familiar voices or speak secrets the players never revealed aloud.
- Warlocks of the Many-Mouthed Mother may hear one mouth speak in her true voice, giving cryptic guidance or demands mid-combat.
